WHEN SEWING

A small cork glued on the side of the sewing machine drawer or sewing box makes a convenient holder on which to place your trimline. After you oil your sewing machine, wipe all accessible parts so there will be no chance of getting oil on the material. Thread the machine and work off the first oily thread on scraps. If you are worried about the colour fastness of an embroidery thread, soak the strand in vinegar for at least an hour. When dry, they should not be faded, even after repeated laundering. When you shorten new, ready made garments, ravel the chain stitch found on the hem and wind on an empty spool. Pin your hem and sew with the thread to insure an exact colour match.

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Unfortunately, however, it is not possible to always keep people who are naturally antagonistic separated. In many cases they are bound to herd together, with resultant fights and wounds that never heal. No tragedies of the war have been bitterer, or more pitiful, than those caused by young wives, with their children, moving in on their husbands' people for the duration. Mothers and their sons' wives, not being able to hit it off together, caused more fatalities to marriages than the enemies' bullets did.

HERE'S ONE SOLUTION

Still and all, while there is no hard and fast follow-this-rule-and-you-cannot-fail method of mothers-in-law and daughters-in-law living together in peace and harmony, there is a way by which they can make themselves persona grata to each other. That is by them assuming the role of hostess and guest to each other. And sticking to it.

As long as a mother forced herself to look upon her son's wife as a visitor, who would peck her legs and depart in due season, she would not let all of the girl's little ways get her down. She might be sorry that her darling boy, whom she had spoiled rotten, to be married to a girl who didn't hang up her clothes and keep her room tidy, and who was allergic to the cooking stove, and who wasted his money; but she wouldn't feel free to correct the habits of company.

She would think, oh, well, let it ride. She won't be here long, and if she suits Jimmy, that's all that matters. He has to live with her, I don't. So as long as mother-in-law doesn't try to boss daughter-in-law or find fault with her ways, all is well and the goose hangs high.

And of even more importance is it for daughter-in-law to conduct herself as a guest should. If she was visiting someone on whom she wished to make a good impression, she would put her best foot foremost. She would adapt herself to her hostess' routine and try to give as little trouble as possible. She would show appreciation of everything that was done for her comfort. She would compliment mother-in-law's pies, instead of telling how she made her pastry. She would suggest changing the furniture, or putting up new draperies. She would be gracious to all of mother-in-law's old friends. She would be helpful without being obtrusive. In a word, she would use the mother-in-law tactics she used in winning her son.

The hostess and guest method of solving the in-law problem is not a sure thing, but it's a good tip. Try playing it.

PLEASE GOD

In his first epistle of the Thesalonians, the earliest, probably of his letters to Christian churches, St. Paul expresses quite simply in two words a philosophy of religion and morals to which many volumes might be devoted. In the English version those words appear as "to please God."

The notion of behaving in such a way as to please God was, indeed, no discovery of the apostle's. If it is viewed in its widest range, it is inherent in all kinds of religious practices, some of them strange and unedifying. In its negative aspect, that of not displeasing the gods, it is one of the essential elements of the Greek religion. The Stoics and Sophocles do not come short of Amos and Isaiah in their moral earnestness; it is the lack of one consistent aim, the Divine Being (inevitable in polytheistic religion) which makes it so difficult to point a picture of man in relation to God that is both ethically and religiously satisfying. In the Old Testament it is the presence or absence of the relation to the righteous God whose will it is that man also should be righteous.

The kind of attack that is made upon what is called anthropomorphism, that is the representation of God as possessing attributes which men find in themselves, is curiously blind to the real point of issue. Briefly that may be said to be the presence or absence of any response by God to man's religious and moral life, to his prayers and to his conduct. If everything that can be called anthropomorphism in man's thought about God is to be abandoned, then all that has ever been said about the justice and mercy, the righteousness and love of God, must be regarded as so much vain talk. St. Pauline himself, "casting all your care upon him for he careth for you," would not be understood.

But those who do not merely believe that the name of God should be retained, but believe in God as the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, all attempt to find a reality of personal life. They live in the assurance that their whole duty is to do the will of God, and that in so far as they do that will they please him.

York And - Vicinity

The York Dayspring Mission Circle was held on Friday evening, Feb. 14, at the home of Mrs. Eileen MacDonald. The president opened the meeting with comments on the theme for the Devotional week, "The Vision for the Task." This was followed by hymn 252 "In Christ there is no East nor West" followed by prayer, this was followed by responsive reading, Psalm 121, verses 24 to 31, this was followed by a reading and hymn 249, "Jesus Shall Reign." This ended the Devotional Period. The business part of the meeting opened with the roll call answered by the word "Kingdom." There were 17 members present and two visitors. This was followed by the minutes which was read and approved. The collection for the evening amounted to 95 cents. Then the members had a discussion on "The Lord's Day of Prayer." It was decided to hold service on Sunday evening. This was followed by the Trinity Y. P. U. if they would put on their play "Anne of Green Gables" in York Hall in the Spring. The roll call was to be answered with a verse which is to be the word "Light." The Bible Quiz for the next meeting is on St. Matthew the 25 chapter. Also the lunch committee for next meeting is Mrs. Gordon Crockett and Mrs. Clifford Chapell. The meeting closed with the Misses Benediction. Later lunch was served by the hostess and committee in charge.

Covehead Road Flock

Ranks Among Best in Performance Record

The R. O. P. Flock of Barred Plymouth Rocks owned by Wilfred J. MacDonald and son, Alvin MacDonald of Covehead, P. E. I., has come through with flying colours, according to official reports revealed by the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Mr. MacDonald's records for his first year in R.O.P. ranks among the best in Canada.

84 Barred Rocks were entered in R.O.P., 79 of which completed their laying year. Only two of the 84 birds failed egg production. Average for flock was 244 eggs with an egg weight of 25.2 ounces per dozen. Outstanding family of birds made individual records of 224, 272, 259, 211, 263, 268, 308 and 267, an average of 264 with an egg weight of 24.7, and 302 eggs with egg weight of 26.

Mr. MacDonald who operates a breeder hatchery also specializes in New Hampshire. Starting in the fall of 1945 with approved stock (Christie Strain), the results of the first year's record keeping was 264 eggs with an average weight of 26.4 ounces per dozen, having individuals that laid 276 and 270 eggs.

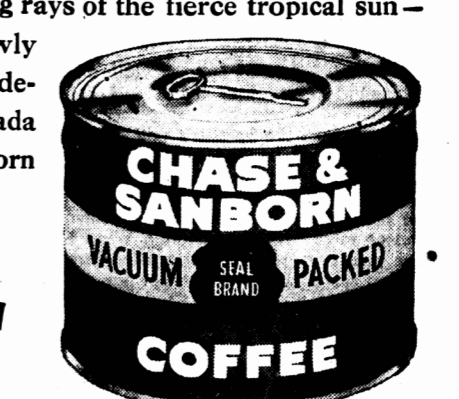

While Mr. MacDonald's entry in R. O. P. is still not large this year, it is evident that the same high production will be maintained or even surpassed. Housed in a modern, insulated, double-deck house, the new training centre, which is off to a grand start, the month of January saw production better than 90 per cent.

things the wonder of the strange visitor, not really strange to us older folk, though entirely missing from our vicinity in recent years.

He came silently around a corner of the wood-pile after dinner, where Jamie watched with interest while Mr. G. our operator, filed the circular saw in readiness for the afternoon's work. He carried a short axe or hatchet and according to Jamie "a black bag on his shoulder—" what would be in it? It was a lone Indian lad—a trapper—and his dog, whose present trap-line takes him along the mill stream, and river. I wished that he might teach Jamie some of the secrets of his trade: what he knew of trap-setting; how to bait them so cleverly as to tempt the wary wild creatures; what a wealth of "knowledge never learned of school" doubtless lay behind his stolid features. Mr. G. knew of his home life and year in the army and of his wife and infant babe, all so interesting to Jamie and me. "Well" James said at least he's not lazy. "Our neighborhood being at a considerable distance from his home. To be disinclined to labor of some kind in James' light, is to be guilty of an unpardonable sin while to be industrious in some way, if it be only as Pard, continuing to bark at a saucy sparrow on a Maple or a mother rabbit burrowing busily in a depth of earth such industry at once catches James' interest and esteem. Tidings received later, reported fair game in our friend's duffle bag. "Isn't that good now Ellen?" James said when he heard it. Glad to find that labor had received a fitting reward.

earlier start—but as it is we swayed a lot of wood, plenty for today." Jamie was missing for part of the afternoon, though we were aware of his going. He went with Josie on a jaunt to the corner store, drawing his small sled along with him. It was his first trip on foot there, a road, I know, many of his forbears knew by heart and this was not made entirely on foot for Jean's drew him, as he said "on every level place." He walked above snow drifts; he thought he heard a squirrel and a small corner dog leaped to get sled with him. All in all it was an enjoyable outing and the two returned with the mailman homing at the end of his day's route.

The colors lingered on the evening sky long after the sun had disappeared behind the trees up the creek. It made a delicate amber setting for the deep green of the spruces along the hill top. Breathless it was then and peaceful, and a pair of wild ducks, wing tips almost touching and dark and fetching against the brightness, flew into the West. Very quiet it was too when Rob's truck went down the driveway, only Pard's parting bark lingering on the still air. Pard keeps me company now, and Tabby strolls to the door to meet a request that is rather disturbing, but is just as well. For I have been forgetting a chore. Now, what else would it be but to darn James' mittens. To have them mended and as he warmed me, "a shape" for the morrow's sawing? Until tomorrow Diary... Good-night.
