The Beauty of a Clear Skin.—The condition of the liver regulates the condition of the blood. A disordered liver causes impurities in the blood and these show themselves in blemishes on the skin. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills in acting upon the liver act upon the blood and a clear healthy skin will follow intelligent use of this Standard medicine. Ladies who will fully appreciate this prime quality of these pills, can use them with the certainty that the effect will be most gratifying.

THE PROMOTER'S WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

ONCE MORE BAB IS DISTURBED BECAUSE OF BLANCHE ORTON

CHAPTER LXIII. The next three months passed quietly and quickly for me. I was so happy with my baby boy so busy getting strong and well so that I might really care for him properly that nothing else seemed to affect me.

Then one day I suddenly woke up to the fact that Neil was out a great deal; that in the last month he had not only taken up the old habit of staying at his club, but that he was remaining away later and more of ten than he ever had before.

He had been so devoted in the months before baby came, so tender and thoughtful of me in the few weeks afterward, that I had been lulled into forgetfulness of things ten times he ever had before.

It was at a dinner given by Blanche Orton, that my eyes were opened. Just a small dinner to a few. She was still in soft grays and lavenders, although her husband had been dead a year. They were coming, Lorraine Morton said, and that was the reason she wore them so long.

I got a very expensive and beautiful gown. I had the same feeling I always had had about looking my best before Blanche Orton, even though I had given her very little thought the past few months (one reason probably being that Lorraine Morton, who usually brought me all the gossip, had been out of town on a visit.) I rested all day long—a tribute I never thought of paying a dinner before baby came. And I was satisfied that I never had looked better. Neil's eyes showed he was pleased and he said several flattering things, making me feel still more assured that I should not be entirely overshadowed by our hostess.

There were only eight at the table. As it had used to be, Neil was next to Mrs. Orton. It seemed to me that she had taken on new fascinations, new attractions. Surely no grief because of her widowhood, was evident on her face; it wore a more vivacious look than before the tragedy. In fact, I had seen her but once or twice since that. She too had been away, and I had remained so closely at home it was not to be wondered at that I felt almost a stranger.

Aside from Lorraine, the guests were strangers to me. But they were gay, attractive people, and I know I talked better than usual—until I saw Lorraine gazing at Neil with such a peculiar look in her eyes that my attention was attracted.

I saw at once he was drinking too much. Then, too, he was leaning toward Blanche, and they seemed to be arguing about something—something disagreeable, it seemed to me. I felt a touch of uneasiness. Such argument, the expression on their faces, showed a degree of intimacy not compatible with the courtesy due a hostess; neither did it give one the impression of a flirtation.

I drooped a little. What could they be talking about in that earnest, confidential way? I had really enjoyed my evening up to the time I caught Lorraine looking at Neil. It had been so long since I had been to an affair.

I made up my mind to question Neil the moment we were alone. Why I should have thought he would be more willing to confide in me because of baby's coming, I can't explain; but, somehow, I did.

Neil and I had rarely talked of anything save the baby since he came. I had not realized it until then. It came to me suddenly that he was talking to her, Blanche Orton, about his business. And that he looked queerly worn out and nervous compared to what he had when he left home.

I would urge him to go away for a vacation. Not alone; baby and I would go along. We would find some quiet place where he could rest.

Before we rose from the table he seemed to have recovered his spirits. But, somehow, what I had seen had made me remember very poignantly the things which had so worried me months before.

Tomorrow—Barbara Begg Neil To Tell of His Relations With Blanche.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION

The home of J. F. Jenkins, Alberr Plains was pleasantly remembered on March, 11th, when many friends assembled to welcome his son Russell home from France, with an address and valuable watch, which was duly acknowledged. The evening was spent with speeches, music and songs. The friends dispersed wishing Mr. and Mrs. Russell Jenkins a safe return to here home.

Address.—We, your neighbours and school mates are assembled here, to honor you for the brave part you have taken in the defence of your country, by helping to annihilate the dastardly aggressive Hun, and to extend to you and your worthy partner a warm and hearty welcome home.

We recall with pride, that you were patriotic enough to leave a lucrative position in the neighboring republic, and enlist in the land of your birth, under the dear old Maple Leaf.

We fully realize the sacrifice you have borne in leaving a happy home and you have demonstrated to us that in a time of national danger, "Action speaks louder than words."

The reception is but a feeble mark of respect and honor that we owe you, and it is our wish that you may be spared many a year of prosperity and happiness.

By your conduct and example you have merited our highest respect and admiration, and we shall always look with pride upon your name as it stands emblazoned upon our country's roll of honor.

In conclusion we now ask you to accept this gift as a slight recognition of your services in our behalf.

Signed. In behalf of your friends.
