The Royal Siamese Cat

(MYRTES-MARIE PLUMMER in Our Dumb Animals)

Have you heard the legend of how these blue-eyed oriental beauties acquired the slight knot that all have near the end of their tails? The story goes that a queen of ancient times was taking a bath and had forgotten to remove her rings. She called the Siamese cat, slipped the rings over its tail and tied a knot in it to keep the rings from falling off. Ever since the cats have had knots in their tails.

Another story is that a Buddhist priest tied a knot in a cat's tail to remind him of something and all the Siamese cats since that day have carried on the knot idea.

The Sacred Siamese is the most intelligent and affectionate of all cats. It can be taught like a dog to do tricks, guard your home and even walk from a leash. These animals originally came from the royal city of Bangkok, Siam, and were first possessed only by the Royal families, so they are sometimes called "Palace Cats."

The seal point Siamese has a cream- colored body of short hair, with legs, tail and ears a deep brown. The head is wedge-shaped There are more legends told of this species of cat than about any animal that I know of. The eyes are a beautiful sapphire blue, which they are supposed to have acquired on their way through heaven. The eyes do not change as they get older, but at night they look like balls of fire. They are truly orientals for their eyes slant toward the nose.

There is a rare strain that has blue markings instead of the chocolate brown, but it is not common in this country.

You can recognize the cry of the Siamese from that of any other cat as it is a little weird, which becomes more so when danger is near. They seem to have intuitive powers and will warn you much the same as a dog. They will remember your friends' faces and are friendly to everyone.

The kittens are pure white at birth and you may feel disappointed, thinking they will never change. However, after a short time dark smudges will begin to show up, and soon the kittens will develop the same markings as the parents. Their hind legs are slightly longer than the front ones and they have the grace of a panther in every movement. They are great jumpers but have a keen sense of balance.

Many of this breed are a bit squint-eyed. The reason given for this is that once a cat was set to watch over a dead king so long that his eyes got tired and he squinted.

These cats are not afraid of anything, and are excellent for catching rats. It is claimed when two are eating from the same dish, one will eat but half the food even though he has had first chance at it. When there is a family, the kittens are allowed to eat their fill first, next comes the mother and the father takes what is left. I do not know whether it would always work out that way or not, but I do know that they are polite, seeming never to forget that they are of royal blood.

The Siamese do not like cold weather and will select a protected box for a bed whenever possible Often you will find one lying flat on his back with his paws curled up, but with one spring he can be several feet away.

His Royal Highness always looks the cream of perfection in his fawn-colored coat, brown velvet shoes, stockings and ear-muffs. You cannot argue him into anything as he will have his way. He enjoys sitting up in an automobile and looking out the window.

One cannot be lonesome with a Royal Siamese around, for he will reply to everything you say to him and seems to know what it is all about.

thery foliage in spring, which remains attractive all season, large panicles of creamy flowers in early summer and gorgeous clusters of red fruit in fall. It needs to be kept in vigorous growth by feeding and an occasional stiff pruning.

Other good shrubs for fall fruit effect are the various members of the Cotoneaster and Euonymus families. Neither have attractive flowers, and consequently they have been little grown in Canada. However, they have excellent foliage and are varied in habit of growth. When properly pruned by keeping the old wood thinned out so that young, vigorous growth is produced, a wealth of fall color results.
