One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's. X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

THE DOUBLE TEST

The only way to find the best is proving it by thorough test. —Old Mother Nature.

Mother Nature had been late in shaking her snow clouds hard enough and often enough to keep the ground white. Some days the ground would be bare of snow. Some days the ground would be bare in places and covered with snow in other places. On only a few days had the ground been all white. Then the snow had lasted for only a little while.

It had been hard on Jumper the Hare. He said so, and it was so. His neighbors agreed. He didn't complain without reason. And it was all on account of his coat. He couldn't change it to meet all three conditions.

"If only I could do it and undo it when I want to," he sighed to his smaller cousin, Peter Rabbit. "Do and undo what?" asked Peter. He looked puzzled. "Change my coat," replied his cousin.

"What difference would it make?" asked Peter.

"All the difference in the world," replied Jumper. "It would take a load off my mind. It certainly would do that. It would save me a lot of worry. Then I could always be dressed just right."

"Huh!" said Peter. He seldom gives thought to his appearance.

"Yes," continued Jumper, "it would make all the difference in the world. When the ground is bare or covered with brown leaves I would wear my brown coat. When there are patches of snow here and there I would wear my brown-and-white coat. When everything around me is white I would put on my white coat. As it is now I have but two coats, a brown one for summer and a white one for winter."

"You are lucky," interrupted Peter.

"How am I lucky?" demanded Jumper.

"To have a white coat in winter. I wish I had one," declared Peter.

"Oh!" said Jumper. "I have a summer coat and a winter coat but there isn't very much difference excepting that one is warmer than the other. Many times I have wished I had a white coat. If I did have I certainly would get around a lot more in winter than I do now."

"I wonder how Mrs. Peter would like that," chuckled Jumper.

"Probably she wouldn't like it," Peter admitted honestly. "Just the same I wish I had a white coat. It is all right when the ground is white but it is all wrong when the ground isn't white, and this year there has been a lot of time with no snow at all since I got my white coat. I've never in all my life been so uneasy and scared as I have this winter. A good many times I have wished I didn't have a white coat."

"A brown coat when everything else is white is just as bad," declared Peter.

Jumper shook his head. "I don't think so. I've tried it both ways and I ought to know," said he.

Peter was under a tangle of brambles. Jumper was too big to get through the opening leading under the brambles, so he was squatting outside in the open. His ears were laid back along his shoulders. The tips were dark. Otherwise he was as white as the snow on which he was squatting. Just then Terror the Goshawk arrived. He perched in a tree close by. He stared straight at Jumper yet didn't see him.

For a long, long time Terror sat there. And all that long, long time Jumper squatted out there in the open without moving so much as a whisker. All that Terror saw was a small heap of snow. At last he flew away. Jumper drew a long breath.

Never in his life had he wanted more to run, but somehow he had kept still. It had been a test of his faith in the wisdom of Old Mother Nature, who all the time had been whispering to him not to move, and a test of that white coat. Watching from the safety of the brambles, Peter had wished more than ever that he had a white coat.
