HONOR FOR SILENT WARRIORS

Those Who Are As Nothing in the Eyes of Men May Be First in the Sight of God—A Memorial Day Sermon to the Unknown Heroes of the Civil War of the United States.

shell in the last battle. We would praise such men as James E. McClure of the Philadelphia Press, with whom Lincoln was in closest contact, and Joseph Medill of the Chicago Tribune and James Gordon Bennett of the New York Herald.

It is a very grave question whether Abraham Lincoln could not better have parted with almost any one of his military generals than he could have lost the genius of railroad organizing, Thomas Alexander Scott. It is a very grave question whether U. S. Grant would not have been disposed from his command and sent back home in disgrace had it not been for Charles A. Dana, who, as the personal representative of Lincoln, went to the front and exposed and denounced the false scandals which were being circulated about the "silent warrior" of the west.

We have read all about the noble services of Dwight L. Moody to the soldier boys at the front. We know that many a dying soldier boy was able to answer "Here!" to the roll call of heaven because some faithful chaplain on earth had prepared him for that "Fall in!" on the other side of the grave.

We cannot to-day too much praise the work of the gospel minister during the agonies of America's four years of carnage. One day a man applied to General Jackson for a position in his army. "What is your business?" asked Jackson. "I am a minister of the gospel," was the reply. Then Jackson, the Christian soldier, said: "My friend, I can give you no position as high as that which God has given to you. Go back to your own church. In the name of Jesus Christ, give comfort to the widows whose husbands have been shot; to the children whose fathers, on account of this bloody war, will never come back; to the young maidens who can never again see their sweethearts. Go back and preach the gospel of sacrifice to the young men who must be enlisted from your town. Go back! In God's name, go back!"

GOOD APPETITE NOT EVERYTHING

You must Digest Your Food as well as Eat It—Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets Ensure Perfect Digestion.

A good appetite may or may not mean that you are in good health. If you eat well and your food is digested your body will benefit from the heat and strength the food contains.

Mr. Bailey says: "I have gained in weight eight pounds since I began to use Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets. Before that no matter what I ate I never seemed to gain strength or put on weight."

holders of those two huge armies laying down their muskets and taking up the plowshare. To their honor be it said that they were ready to turn their backs upon strife and, side by side, work together in the vocations of peace.

Without any doubt, Robert E. Lee was one of the finest characters America ever produced. Would you like to know what was to me the greatest act of that grand life? I find it not in his actions before the war.

Some time ago I stood on the top of the Washington monument and looked off upon the battlefields of America and dreamed my dreams. I saw hundreds of thousands of human bones bleaching in the sunlight, gnawed of the vulture and the wolf. I heard the muffled drums beating the tattoo at sunset. As the artillery wagons rumbled away to the rear, and star twinkled to star, I heard sentinel by the glare of the campfire call to sentinel: "All's well! All's well along the Potomac!"

There go the booming of the cannon and the sharp commands of the officers. "Steady, boys, steady, steady!" There is the ping of the bullet, and the dying soldier clutches at his heart as he moans, "My babies, O God, my poor babies!" and then drops dead. There comes the blood curdling Confederate cry, "Hi! Hi! Hi! Hi! Hi!" There is the long line of set faces behind the glittering bayonets. The heavens redden and glow. The flames leap and hiss and dance and make merry over the burning homes. The falling beams go crash, crash, crash! The rivers are deep with flowing blood; the grave trenches are filled with a million dead.

As I turn and look upon the great white dome of the Capitol the old national flag flaps and waves. Its stars glitter like the eyes of the maidens who, after awhile as old women, read and reread the torn and the yellow letters which their heroes just before the fatal battle wrote about the bride homes which were destined never to be built. And as I look upon the old flag again the white stripes look like the white handkerchiefs which were put about the shattered arms. The long, deep streaks of red prove that its folds had once been dipped into pools of human blood.

Then, as I look up and down the great Pennsylvania avenue, I seem to see the united armies of the boys in blue and of the boys in gray marching, marching, marching. I see the lines melt away. Following with my eye one soldier, I see him take his discharge, and he starts for home. I cannot tell whether this discharged soldier is now heading for the Michigan hills or for the Georgia plantations. In his civilian dress he has no distinctive insignia telling me whether he fought under Grant or under Lee. Then I see this soldier coming up to the farm gate and being welcomed home by his dear ones. Now his wife nearly faints away for joy. Then in the evening hour I see him gather the little children about him. He opens the old book, he reads a chapter; the family kneel in prayer; then the lights are put out, and I know the war is forever ended.

Come, ye Christian heroes of the past, both praised and unpraised; come with your sacred memories and your buried dead. Come, ye Christian heroes of the future, with your cradles and unborn generations; come, ye nations about to be born for Christ, come all times and all millenniums! Down in prayer, and kneel to Him who will yet be crowned King of kings and Lord of all. Halleluiah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth!
