are others. If you can get hold of a book by A. D. Ritchie. He has just been appointed to the Chair of Logic and Rhetoric in the University of Edinburgh. It is called Civilization, Science, and Religion. Read it and study it. I am not asking you to agree with it. The point that I want to make is that I do not think that any philosopher would have written it before the war. That he has written it is a sign of a certain change in attitude. May I just make one quotation from it to illustrate what I mean? "For a standard of values and a criterion to distinguish progress in civilization from regress we can look to Christian tradition only. If that fails us 'we are of all men most miserable'." That is a post-war not given a tremendous impetus through the contribution of the Colonies during the war. We are more concerned about the plans for their education, about extending their medical services, about their welfare generally. There is no doubt whatever about this, the conscientiousness of the war, that is a determination to spread our civilization to them at all costs. And, I repeat, this civilization contains a hard core of Christian teaching which many of our teachers are not inclined to reject out of hand. For us, race theory has no place; nor had it for Christ. But—and here I am sure that I correctly interpret the views of most university teachers—Christianity and intellectual enquiry must go hand in hand. There is a danger, and a danger which will temporarily get out of step. No ministers or priests have been trained for six years. There are schemes for training ex-servicemen; but these must be watched. If men are going to lead the religious life of a nation they must have the proper intellectual equipment and training, otherwise they will not gain the respect and confidence of their congregations, congregations which already contain a high proportion of educated men and women. The intellectual life of the Church, we feel, ought to be in advance of, and not behind, the intellectual life of the rest of the nation. The problem of training men for the professions who have been in the war is a disturbing one, but I, for one, do not feel that it will be met by a lowering of the intellectual level of those who enter them. Here generosity must be shown. Many university teachers are aware of the dangers of a semi-educated clergy, but we are not always sure that the Church shares our misgivings. Still, a danger known is a danger thwarted. I am sure that both the universalities and the churches will come out of the ordeal of the last years invigorated. They will be purged of many doubts, inconsistencies, and insanities, which were gnawing at our very vitals. At any rate, we are all more sincere and more tolerant, and when we weigh in the same balance the values of Hitler's Germany and those of the Christian Church, we are in no doubt about which of them are more fitting for man to follow. A NASTY COLD BANISHED IN ONE NIGHT?

Particularly at this time of the year, something that will help banish colds on the chest is very useful. It was fortunate for Mr. Edgar, St. Laurent, Quebec, that he heard of Nervilleine. Read his experience:
 "For over a year I suffered with my throat. I suffered very badly. I used different remedies, but without definite results; then I heard of Nervilleine, and can now appreciate its efficacy. I have adopted Nervilleine as my throat remedy—that is why I am in good health today." Nervilleine is a strong, penetrating liniment that helps to ease congestion and thereby aids in bringing quick, effective relief. 35c at all dealers.

No Attire for Men Because a Tire is First to Get Rayon

Base facts of the men's clothing industry aren't enough rayon to fill the shortage are revealed in this demands for suit linings as well as photo of a fashion show put on at a tire fabric, and clothing, is by Washington war vets. There getting the shorts end of the deal

NEW YORK — Men's clothing racks are empty because automobiles they are filling up. So men who need both new suits and new tires must "take their choice—they can't have both. Rayon used to line men's suits and overcoats also is in great demand as a fabric for the casings of new synthetic tires. Natural rubber tires used cotton cords but the synthetics gain in processed durability with rayon, the tire industry has become an important rayon buyer, and Akron is ordering tremendous quantities of the yarn.

Clothing manufacturers say there is no feasible substitute for rayon linings. Silk is equally scarce and apical, a high grade mixture of rayon and silk has been discontinued by mills. Clothiers need approximately three yards of rayon lining for every four yards of suiting. The rayon demand of the clothing industry will be about 100,000,000 yards this year. So severe is the shortage of rayon that even the production of rayon on the basis of two suits per veteran 24,000,000 garments must be produced. Civilian demands is estimated at 16,000,000 suits. This total of 40,000,000 compares with a peak production of 26,000,000 in 1941. The story in top coats and overcoats is almost

Three months ago an UNRRA doctor took the photograph, top of a nine-month-old baby, nothing but a skeleton following the child's liberation from a Nazi concentration camp. The baby is a picture of health today, photographed below, after three months of care in Sweden. The children are repatriated as they regain their health.
