MURDERER BY IMPULSE IS ARRESTED IN PARIS

Dramatic Capture of English Lady's Assassin: London Detectives' Clever Ruse.

Paris July 8.—At 6 o'clock on Saturday afternoon the Paris police arrested the murderer of Miss Henrietta Charlotte Cary, the English governess who was found strangled in a lane near Nanterre.

The murderer is an ironworker named Auguste Gailhard, and he has made a full confession of his guilt.

His arrest was effected in a singularly dramatic manner, and the details leading up to it and the subsequent confession are characteristic of French police methods.

A few days ago seven men, one of whom was Gailhard, were arrested on suspicion, but the usual interogations failed to elicit their connection with the crime, and they were all discharged.

Gailhard's replies, however, were anything but satisfactory to M. Hamand, the chief of the police, who decided to keep the man under constant surveillance. "If he's guilty," said the astute chief, "he will betray himself."

THE TRAP.

Two clever members of the detective force were instructed to strike up a friendly acquaintance with the suspected man. This they had no difficulty in doing, and then a secret plan was formed to entrap him.

On Saturday morning one of the detectives, both of whom had throughout the inquiry been disguised as wordmen, invited Gailhard into a cafe near the ironworks at Puteaux, where he was employed. Here they sat at a table with other workmen and consumed two or three drinks—at the expense of the detective.

While Gailhard was being thus hospitably treated, the other detective was making a thorough search of the man's apartments in the Rue Vielle de Paris at Suresnes.

In the house he found indisputable proof of Gailhard's guilt.

A pearl necklace, an Indian keepsake, an English penny, and one or two other trifles, all of which Miss Cary had worn on the morning of her death, were found in Gailhard's room.

Among his clothes was a pair of trousers. The knees were muddy, showing that he had worn them when he committed the deed, and that he had knelt down when he fixed his fatal grip on the poor woman's throat.

Without the loss of a moment the detective, carrying the murdered woman's property in his pocket, went to the cafe at Puteaux.

THE ARREST.

Gailhard was delighted to see him again. He rose to give a cordial greeting. The other detective rose, too, and Gailhard was astounded to hear his supposed friends quietly assert that he was their prisoner.

As the words, "In the name of the law," were spoken Gailhard turned pale and made a pitiful attempt to laugh the matter off.

Without removing him from the gaze of the other occupants of the cafe, the detectives deftly searched his pockets, and brought out first an English sovereign and then Miss Cary's watch.

The man, overcome with anguish, burst into tears.

He was taken into the street, followed by an angry crowd of men, who made desperate attempts to drag him from the clutches of the police for the purpose of lynching him.

They cried "Death to the robber and assassin!" and it was with the greatest difficulty that he was eventually conveyed to the police station, where, knowing now that escape was impossible, he confessed.

THE CONFESSION.

"I acted in a moment of madness," he declared.

"I was walking near Mont. Valerien, when I saw her there alone. Up to that moment I had no idea of crime in my head.

"But I saw her gold chain on her breast, I saw her other jewels, and as there was nobody about I decided to strangle her.

"I went up to her and asked her for money. She replied in English, and then tried to run away.

"I seized her and carried her into a field. I threw her down and strangled her. I could not help it. I was mad.

"I searched her clothing for valuables. While I was doing this two men passed. They did not know what I was doing, and they went on.

"I took away her jewels and then went home, leaving her dead body in the field."

At 9 o'clock this morning Gailhard was examined by a magistrate, to whom he repeated his confession.

"The rays of the sun and alcohol," he added, "were responsible for the crime. If my old mother hears about it she will die."

Here he completely broke down, and, bursting into tears, exclaimed: "To think that drink should have made me so mad as to commit such a horrible crime!"

He had the reputation of being a very efficient workman, but he squandered his earnings in gambling and drink.

A curious sidelight on the character of the murderer was thrown by the discovery, in an inner pocket of his waistcoat, of a picture postcard addressed to a girl to whom he is engaged. The picture on the card is that of a hand holding a flower with the motto, "Hope is a loan I get from happiness."

Underneath this Gailhard had written: "May this gift from my timidity to thy simplicity be precious to thee. May the motto above be thine, as it is mine."

VICTIM'S FUNERAL.

Two hours before her murderer's arrest, the remains of Miss Cary had been taken from the morgue to Christ Church, in the Boulevard Bineau, and thence to the cemetery, where they were buried.

The sad little procession in the rain consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Shuffrey (the sister and brother-in-law of the victim), M. Rondest (from whose house in Nanterre Miss Cary went to meet her death), Mrs. Leigh and several friends from the home in the Avenue Wagram.

The coffin was covered with wreaths from friends and sympathizers.

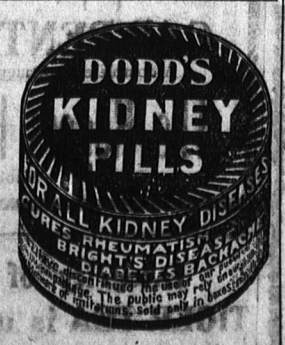
"WEEKLY" CHANGED TO "TRI-WEEKLY"

The "Weekly Edition" of "The Charlottetown Guardian" was changed on July 1st to a "Tri-Weekly Edition." This was done because it is considered that the "Weekly" is too slow for a province with so many daily and tri-weekly mails as that of Prince Edward Island. In the past, four or eight pages have been printed on Friday, eight on Saturday or Monday and these twelve or sixteen pages have been held until the following Wednesday when eight more have been printed and then the entire twenty or twenty-four pages have been mailed as one paper to all subscribers. Thus the news of about two thirds of the issue is so old as to be of very little value when it reaches its destination the week following its actual publication. Now each section is mailed on Monday, Wednesday and Friday as soon as off the press. All the news is thus fresh, and each section of ads. and reading matter much more likely to be read thoroughly than if the entire twenty to twenty-four pages arrived but once a week, and all at one time. All advertisements will appear in but one section of each entire week's issue as in the past, unless it is desired that they appear more frequently, in which case arrangements can be made with the management. Regular advertisers in the past have been required to have "changes" in not later than Saturday, and by the time the paper reached subscribers the following week it was often desirable that other goods arriving in the meantime be advertised. Under the three-a-week issue "changes" received up to either Tuesday, Thursday, or Saturday at ten a. m. will be printed in either the Wednesday, Friday or Monday issue respectively, and thus reach readers when new and fresh. Transient advertisements can appear either once, twice or thrice a week as arranged for. It is believed that all readers will appreciate the change, as they will in future receive a paper, issued each Monday, Wednesday and Friday of every week instead of twenty to twenty-four pages issued but Wednesday of each week. Advertisers very much prefer that their ads appear but once a week in a tri-weekly rather than in a Weekly of two or three times the size, as they are much more likely to be read carefully.



You can always get the latest and best in Books and Stationery at Carters.
