STRENGTHENING THE PROHIBITION ACT

missioner in Summerside. They deliberately sent the men away so that they might not be held by the Crown to give evidence. These were two points upon which I was obliged to differ, and differ very widely, from those gentlemen. Mr. Schurman and those who form a group around him. I believe that every right-thinking person in this House and every right-thinking person outside the House too, will join with me in condemning the methods which were employed by those men, in the first place in regard to procuring evidence, and in the next place, in spiriting away the witnesses from the province. I am confident that if those men had come out frankly and stated, we sent the witnesses away because we did not want you to get them and hold them for fear we would have to pay them some more money, their position would not be so unenviable. But they did not do that. They undertook to throw the blame upon the prosecutor, upon the magistrates, upon every person except themselves. Now, in the further development of the situation those gentlemen, if you will accept their own story, had no difficulty at all in working with the Government up to that time. Then, however, they undertook to show the Government just what they could do if their will was not obeyed; and one of their first actions that represented that view and intention was the presentation of a brand-new combination to be called the Prohibition Act, put before me at a time when I had just returned from Ottawa, when the House had been in session in my absence for ten days, when I was still engaged to the limit of my capacity in handling those matters that remained to be done from the Ottawa trip, to master the situation in the House here as to details of business and to prepare all the work that had to be carried through just at that time, when any person would know that every ounce of energy was called for to attend to the work on hand. Just at that time they piled in this big Act, not amendments by any means, but a revolutionary bill, and so pressing were my engagements that it was absolutely impossible for me to find time for days

Charlottetown Druggist Pleases Customers

E. A. Foster, druggist, reports customers greatly pleased with the QUICK action of simple buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., as mixed in Adler-ika. This simple remedy drains the old foul matter from the bowels so THOROUGH that ONE SPOONFUL relieves almost ANY CASE of constipation, sour or gassy stomach. It is so powerful that it is used successfully in appendicitis. Adler-ika never gripes and the INSTANT action is surprising.

afterwards even to read it—physically impossible.

"ALL OR NONE."

You know how those gentlemen urged that that bill should go through—the bill and nothing but the bill. It was not that this Legislature, which represents the whole people, were to be free to take the bill up and deal with it as they would any other bill. They said, "We must have the whole bill and nothing else." That was a pretty large order, even if the bill was a most desirable one. But even here, we reached a point where I believe the good sense of this province will stand by us and say we took the right position. That bill contains a provision allowing any constable or bailiff or policeman to go into your house or mine and upon his own statement of belief to search that house and break locks and go through the whole premises. And they said that the reason for their putting in that provision was—what? That you would find some such provision in the laws of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and Manitoba, and that probably I did not know that much. I know this much, that you don't find the same provision in the laws of these provinces. Take Nova Scotia, for example. You don't break open the doors. You may go in to search, but the power to search without the power to break through is a matter of very little value. But when the proposition is made that this constable, or bailiff or policeman may, upon his own belief, go into your house and break open everything in the place in order to make a search and then justify himself by swearing that he believed it, that is going to the last extremity, and as I told those gentlemen, it is only justified in cases where the law is to be carried into the wilderness among savages and where the Courts of justice are not available. In this province, the most thickly settled part of Canada, with an old civilization as there is upon the northern part of the continent of America, that we should go back to a form of Government under which a bailiff or constable could, out of his own volition, go in and turn our houses upside down and smash his way through because he had believed in his own mind, or was ready to swear to it, that there was liquor there contrary to the law—no precedent of any other province would weigh one straw against what we know to be the elementary rights of British justice.

SACRED DOCTRINE.

That a man's house is his castle is a doctrine that should only be set aside on the gravest possible cause; and we in this House are here not only to respect the freedom which our forefathers gave, but we are here to preserve for our children the spirit of freedom and to see that while every safeguard is thrown around our people, that within that limitation every liberty that has come down to us should be preserved with the most jealous care. It is a very easy thing to part with our liberty piecemeal. It has taken all the ages to gain it for us, and to preserve the proper balance between safeguarding the young and rising generations from evil, on the one hand, and preserving the liberty of our people, on the other, in that debatable and doubtful region, most of the work of the teacher, the philosopher and the law-giver has to be done. I don't think that there is any member of this House, and I don't think there is any person outside the House, whose opinion we should regard, who will for a moment say that the claim made by those people that this provision should be in the law, should have been dealt with in any other way than it was dealt with. The bill was handed over to a committee, and they made a bill which was received by this House and acted upon. Now this is a peculiar circumstance that all the world that is interested in this matter should know. I have it from two members of the former Government that this same bill, this same proposal about search without warrant, had been turned down by two of the former Governments. It had been submitted to the Attorneys General and had been refused absolutely. There was no row made by them they had no hired secretary to go through the country shouting from the housetops and wherever else he could get an audience, what a frightful thing it was to turn it down. When they came to us they surely must have known that they were bringing a proposition that, having been twice turned down already, was almost sure to be turned down again. A large group of complaints was raised by those gentlemen against—whom? Against Stipendiary Magistrate Martin, of Charlottetown, against Stipendiary Wright, of Prince County, and against the prosecutors. These complaints were sent in and they asked to have a commission appointed to examine into the matter against—whom? and in the hope that they would not leave Summerside in order to conclude the cases. They well knew that the Court was constituted there by appointing the only available officer to act as Clerk of the Court, that is the Deputy Prothonotary of Summerside, and that he could not leave his Court. However, they applied to Judge McLeod and he told them what the understanding frankly, that I never dreamt for a moment that the enquiry could by any pretence be extended beyond two or three days, and there is no question that that time would have been quite sufficient. But by the time the Court opened in Summerside, the intention was evident—it was disclosed from the very inception of the hearing—that what they were after was not an enquiry into the conduct of the officials that might aid the Government in dealing with them, but that it was a direct attack upon the Government. They sought to involve any person connected with the Government, in improper practices, and they failed; but it took many days, and the time came when, after several postponements and the summer was pretty well gone, a proposal came that the rest of the cases should be heard in Charlottetown. They well knew that Judge McLeod in accepting the commission had made the stipulation that he would not leave Summerside in order to conclude the cases. They well knew that the Court was constituted there by appointing the only available officer to act as Clerk of the Court, that is the Deputy Prothonotary of Summerside, and that he could not leave his Court. However, they applied to Judge McLeod and he told them what the understanding
