The Old Order Changes

By DAVID LYALL

"And I jes want to say afore you peak that I wouldn't 'ave bothered you nor you people, even now, only for Aunt Coles. You see this is my real 'ome, Mrs. Freeland. My own mother's dead, and if I was to go 'ome now to Camberwell my step would kill me, I do believe."

Mrs. Freeland swallowed something in her throat, walked over to the girl, touched her again, and drew her down to the hard, horsehair sofa. "Look here, my dear; Edie is your name, isn't it? I won't deny that I 'me here to-day very angry prepared to say and do I don't know what. It is a cruel thing to happen in a family like ours who have prided themselves on their honour and have a great position to keep up."

Even in her most natural moments it was impossible for Mrs. Freeland to keep off the bombastic note. "But at the same time we're not monsters. Our son has not behaved well; neither of you have. If you had set properly about it at the beginning you might, as you say yourself, have been married then. It was war time, and the strangest marriages were condoned because of it. But it is not 'oo late to make amends. Leave it to me, to us, and something will be settled up. There will have to be a quiet wedding somewhere. Hadn't I better see your aunt?"

"She isn't in. She's gone into Barnsley by the charabanc, and won't be back till eight o'clock."

"She saw Mr. Freeland this morning?"

Edie's face lightened joyfully. "Oh, yes, an angel of a man! Oh, ma'am, ain't you proud to live with him?"

It was a bow at a venture and caused Mrs. Freeland slightly to wince.

"Tom ain't a bit like 'im; but I suppose there can't be many like that. It wouldn't do."

"He is a very just, good man, of course," said Mrs. Freeland primly. "But the best of us make mistakes," she added piously. "Well, I'm glad I've seen you. Tell your aunt that I have been here, and that we have the whole matter in hand."

She stood up, for strange feelings were working within. She wanted to mother that young forlorn creature, to pillow her head on her breast in a way she had never wished to do to her own sheltered daughters since they grew up. They had not needed it. A lightning glimpse. Most like a sword-thrust, of how timidly the unsheltered girl can find life, was vouchsafed to Harriet Freeland that day, and made her a umbler and a better woman.

They did not kiss at parting, however, because Mrs. Freeland was free of mawkish sentiment and had a due sense of the fitting.

Austere kindness must be the keynote of her treatment of the girl, and of Tom. But they shook hands very warmly at the door. Mrs. Freeland patted her shoulder, bade her be of good courage and walked down between the royal hollyhocks something stinging her eyes.

She walked away from the gate very rapidly, and by the time she had found Bee among the gorse on the common, had fully recovered herself.

"Why mother, you haven't been long! Wasn't she in?"

"Yes, my dear, but there was no need for a long interview; what I had to say was quickly said. Come, let us get back to the motor."

Something about her mother earned Bee that it was not an opportune moment to ask questions. They purposely avoided the side of the village where the Cole's cottage stood. The whole breadth of the village green was between them.

"You'd like a cup of tea, dear, wouldn't you?" Mrs. Freeland asked as they approached the inn.

"I would, but not if you are in a hurry to get home, mummy. Don't mind me."

"Oh, I'd like it too. Come inside."

They found the coffee-room empty, and pretty soon a quite nice tea made its appearance. Not till then, when she was pouring out, did Mrs. Freeland make a remark about the object of their outing.

"Your brother Tom has behaved disgracefully, Bee. There's nothing the matter with the poor girl. She's common, of course; never had a chance; dragged up by her step-mother in a brewers' drayman's house. Yes, I'm ashamed of Tom."

"Oh, mother!" said Bee a little breathlessly, for there was no precedent for this sort of attitude, this unexpected change of front. The drive home was accomplished almost in silence, and they arrived there about half-past five. Leaving Bee to enter the house alone, Mrs. Freeland walked through the door in the wall

Claim Coastguard Looted Motorship

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 10.—Coast-guardsmen of the patrol boat Active stole cigars, a fountain pen and half a dozen souvenir pencils from the Shelbourne N. S. motor cruiser Radio 11 and other property was "missing" following the recent seizure of the ship, 35 miles off the Boston Lightship, declared Captain Epton Shenkle, of the alleged run runner, in the office of the United States Marshall here. Captain Shenkle and eight members of his crew were held for hearing January 19 on a charge of conspiracy to smuggle liquor into the United States.

No official charge was made against anyone on the Active but Attorney Matthew L. McGrath, counsel for the Nova Scotians, promised a thorough investigation into the matter.

The Radio II was chased for an hour and 25 shots were fired at it according to Captain Shenkle.

"One of my men missed a pair of rubber boots," he said, "and I reported this to Boatswain Gordon Hammond, who was in charge, he returned with them a short time later. They took a box of cigars, a pen and the souvenir pencils. Two sextants were missing and a barometer was missing, too. I don't know if they will be given back to us."

No mention of the alleged thefts was made when the men were arraigned, but the hearing was confined to unanimous pleas of not guilty. When federal officials boarded the Active in the lower harbor, Captain Shenkle is reported to have agreed "that he had no fault to find" with the treatment accorded by Hammond in charge of the coastguard boat. Some doubt was later expressed by federal officials that any property had been stolen from the Radio II. They thought that when Captain Shenkle had a chance to search among his belongings the missing articles would be found.

Captain Shenkle said "there was plenty to eat" aboard the patrol boat, but the men were given no water with which to wash and had no place to lie down. "Whenever we walked about, there was a fellow after us with a gun," he asserted.

An International Highway Planned

VANCOUVER, B.C., Jan. 10.—(By The Canadian Press)—From the land of the midnight sun in Alaska to the pampas of the Argentine will be the route of the international highway now being projected by governments, good roads associations and automobile clubs of the countries concerned.

There is at present a paved highway from the Mexican border to Vancouver, and over the rebuilt Cariboo highway, it is now possible for motorists to travel from Vancouver as far north as Hazelton, on the Sheena River. Negotiations are now being pressed for continuation of the road from Hazelton to Alaska, Premier S. F. Tolmie having taken the initiative in sponsoring the route and receiving considerable support from United States interests.

Early this year the Mexican government will start work on a road from her northern to southern borders, a link in the international Pacific Highways that will eventually run to Buenos Aires. There is a good road which can be used through Mexico now, for a good part of the way but it is split by mountain passes known as the Barrancas in the state of Nayarit. The Automobile Club of Southern California is now cooperating with the Mexican authorities in surmounting this difficulty and a through highway will soon materialize.

Where the road will run when it is eventually continued across Mexico, has not yet been decided, but those familiar with conditions in South America claim that the only possible route will follow the Atlantic from Colon, Panama. This would carry the highway through the Guianas and down through Brazil. This, of course, would require engineering of the first order and enormous expense, but highway experts declare that it is by no means out of the question to build such

Indigestion So Bad Was Afraid To Eat

Mrs. A. T. Bowman, 157 Rebecca St., Hamilton, Ont., writes—"I had been troubled, for years, with indigestion and suffered so badly I was afraid to eat. I am on my third bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, and can now eat anything I like without distress after, and can enjoy my sleep every night without fear of suffering. I cannot praise B.B.B. too highly for what it has done for me."

Loan Account Show's Decrease

ADELAIDE, SOUTH AUSTRALIA Jan. 10.—(By The Canadian Press)—South Australia's expenditure from loans during the present financial year will be the lowest in twenty years. According to the Labor Premier, Hon. L.L.Hill, the gross outlay will be about $6,000,000. Various state undertakings will return a revenue of nearly half that sum.

The South Australian government has reduced the wages of 3000 men in the railway service, these amounting in some cases to $4 weekly.

Premier Hill has been criticized by Trade Union leaders who admit that they favored repudiation of the state's debts. This, in the belief of Mr. Hill, is most regrettable.

"The Australian standard of living, which we are endeavoring to protect by improving the credit of the country abroad, would be reduced below the level of that in European countries by the adoption of that policy," the Premier said. "The Hill Government has had to adopt a most unpopular policy in a courageous effort to help save Australia and, incidentally, this State, from utter chaos."

Do Not Profit By Education

So Declares Micmac Indian Discussing The Problems of His Race—Money Wasted On Schools, He Writes.

TRURO, N. S., Jan. 10.—Claiming that "trapping, basket and axe handling" are the natural trades of his people, an Indian under the nom de plume "Glooscap" expressed his views in the Letters to the Editor Column of the Truro News on the proposed Indian College to be built at Shubenacadie, N. S.

"Not very long ago," the letters states, "I was asked what I thought of our some thousand dollars Indian College at Shubenacadie where the final touches of our long drawn 'civilization' is to be given, where everything Indian is to be forever obliterated or cast into the Bottomless Pit. I was told, in less than ten years time, some smart young Indians can become Priests, doctors and lawyers, young squaws school teachers, stenographers, and salesladies just like the whites today."

"Remembering my own experience of the effects or consequences of White Mans' education upon an Indian, and knowing how unchangeable Le the Low Indian is, I had to utter one of my great grand-fathers grunts and prayed to our old Father Glooscap to come and save us which I hope he will do, for to be an Indian is to be forever in constant state of being nothing more than a looker on, longing for the good things of this world which he sees but never can get. It is nearly forty years since the Indians schools were introduced in all our Reservations in Nova Scotia. Millions and millions of dollars have been spent to educate 'The Indian'. Today we have not one single Injin who can earn his bread and butter through or by the use of his pen.

"As some one said, three months after an Indian priest is ordained and Indian Doctor and Indian lawyer graduates you will find the three working together at baskets and handles. "Modernism instead of improving the condition of Micmac Indians in Nova Scotia, is playing havoc with them, and everything else 'Indian.' "Our last Christmas in our Reserve here was a modern one. Go to church in the morning, go back to your own house, enjoy your own dinner. If any Indian done it sixty years ago no prayers could have saved his lost soul.

"For sixty years ago an old Indian Christmas was all 'Indian', all saucy whites, including Priests were excluded from the Holy of Holies where feast upon feasts raged from a day before Christmas until New Year. So our modern Indian Christmas here was a mere shadow of our former ones."
