A band of them came down apparently to break up the performance. When the leader of the company came before the curtain to ask for a chance to give the play he was booted. The schooner had just left the shipyard and was passing through a draw bridge, when an alarm of fire sounded at Pocomoke. The boy ran from the cabin, and in his eagerness fell overboard. THIS POLICEMAN REFUSES TO DIE

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—Surgeons are marvelling at the vitality displayed by Martin Fay, a detective who is convalescing in a hospital from seven bullet wounds in the abdomen. He was shot during the fusillade at a Bronx roadhouse two weeks ago, when he and other detectives attempted to arrest James Vogel, a notorious thief and "Fagin" and his wife, who fought desperately when brought to bay. Two detectives and the thieves died from the wounds received, but it was announced definitely for the first time today that Fay would recover. Mrs. Fay was told that he would probably be home before Christmas, hearing papers of promotion to the rank of first grade detective, which Police Commissioner Waldo recently sent him. Surgeons attribute Fay's recovery to the fact that all of the wounds were made by steel bullets, and to the fact that his promotion has had a wonderfully stimulating affect upon his vitality.
