A Morning Smile

She—if only men acted after marriage as they do during the engagement, there wouldn't be half the divorces.

He—No, but there would be twice the bankruptcies.

Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. When walking with two women, should a man walk between them or at one side, leaving them together?

A. He should walk at one side, leaving the women together.

Q. When an invitation is extended verbally or by phone, is it proper to say, "I'll let you know later?"

A. Never. A verbal or phone invitation should be accepted or declined immediately without a half-minute's hesitation.

Q. Is it permissible to take up food on the fork and divide it into two mouthfuls?

A. No, it is regarded as very poor table manners.

For The Cook

PINEAPPLE TORTE

1-3 cup butter. 1/2 cup sugar. 5 tablespoons of pineapple juice. 1 cup flour. 2 teaspoons baking powder. 1 teaspoon lemon extract. 1/2 cup chopped canned pineapple. 4 egg yolks. 4 egg whites, beaten. 2-3 cup sugar.

Cream the butter and add 1/2 cup of sugar. Add the pineapple juice, flour, baking powder and egg yolks. Beat 3 minutes. Add the lemon extract and pineapple. Pour into greased shallow pan. Spread with egg whites which have been beaten until creamy with the 2-3 cup sugar. Bake 30 minutes in slow oven. Cool and serve.

This makes a delicious dessert for Sunday night supper.

MORE BRITISH PLAYS AND PLAYERS TO BE BROUGHT TO CANADA

MONTREAL, July 13.—Designed to develop a British theatrical connection throughout the Dominion the Civic Repertory Company of Montreal, Limited, has been organized under a Quebec charter. The company will book all suitable attractions from coast to coast, and will organize, supervise and guarantee entire trans-Canadian tours of British theatrical productions.

The idea is to introduce into Canada new plays from the Old Country and also to bring back to this Dominion all popular theatrical attractions that are assured of a profitable season here.

All contracts of the company will

Widowed Father Who Denies His Helpful Daughter Any Pleasure—Are Secret Marriages Wise?—Marvelous Man Who Wants to Live Near His Mother-in-Law

Dear Miss Dix—At the age of 16 my mother died and I left school to keep house for my father and an afflicted sister. My father is very well off, but I do all the housework, make all of our clothes and take care of two cows, as we live in the country. My father is good to me except that he is not willing for me to have any pleasure. I am a girl of 21, good looking and popular with the boys, but he will not allow me to entertain my friends in my own home because we keep him awake. He absolutely refuses me permission to attend a dance, and when I go into town to the movies, as I do occasionally with a boy, he creates horrible scenes if we do not return before 11 or 12 o'clock.

Now, Miss Dix, I am a good girl and I go with nice boys, and I only desire to have a few of the amusements that belong to my time of life. What shall I do? Lie to my father about where I go? Get married just to get away from home? Leave my father and sister to the care of a hired housekeeper and get a job, as I could easily do, or what? Or could you say something that would make my father be a little more lenient to me? PHYLLIS.

I am afraid I can't say anything that would change your father's point of view because his attitude is inspired by selfishness and jealousy and obstinate stupidity, and these make him shut his eyes to the injustice that he is doing you.

He does not want boys to come to see you because he is afraid that you might fall in love with one of them and leave him, and that would interfere with his comfort. No doubt, he loves you and he realizes how lonely and dreary the home would be without your bright presence in it. Besides, you are cheaper and much more efficient than any servant he could hire.

And he isn't considering your happiness or welfare at all. It doesn't even occur to him that you are sacrificing your youth to him and your afflicted sister, or that it is hard for a young girl to have laid upon her weak shoulders the burden of a family that only an older woman is strong enough to carry.

I think there is no more pathetic situation in life than that of the girl in her teens who, through her mother's death, is suddenly thrust into her mother's place and forced to assume duties and obligations that are not of her making.

Many a time I have felt like weeping when I have seen little girls struggling to hold a household together, cooking and washing and scrubbing when they should have been playing themselves, and mothering younger brothers and sisters when they need mothering as much as the youngsters.

That is what you have done, Phyllis, and I wish that I knew of some way of making your father see what a heroine you have been and what a good sport you have been in standing by him in his necessity. I wish still more that I could make him see how unfair he is in not being willing to let you have all the good times you possibly can as poor pay for all that you do, and I wish most of all that I could make him see that now is your time to make your matrimonial hay, and that is he keeps you from marrying, as he will if he drives all of the young men away, he is dooming you to a lonely old age.

I do not believe that any child is called upon to sacrifice his or her whole life to their parents. Undoubtedly, children owe a great duty to their fathers and mothers, but it does not involve their giving up their every chance of happiness and prosperity to a father or mother's whim. So I think that if your father refuses to let you go out with nice young men and have nice young men come to see you in the proper way, you will be justified in leaving him to the tender mercies of a hired housekeeper while you get yourself a job and work for an employer who does not consider that he has the right to tyrannize over you.

But don't get married just to get away from home. That is jumping out of the frying pan into the fire because very often husbands are just as bossy as fathers. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I am a senior in college and desperately in love with an adorable girl. I wish to secretly marry her and have only her immediate family know it, but her father and brother object, even though we have the consent of her mother. I wish to take up a three-year law course and then announce our marriage. We are so much in love that we do not feel that we can wait until I am through school to marry. Please advise me what to do. A LONELY SENIOR.

If you are so much in love as all that, I should certainly advise you to get married, but do it openly and honorably and publicly and not have any hole-and-corner business about it.

What is the objection to getting decently married? There is nothing to prevent a married man from attending a law school. There is nothing to keep a girl from keeping on with her job and supporting herself after marriage as she is doing before marriage if she is a business girl. And if she is a domestic girl she can still live at home with her parents who, I should think, would much prefer to have her respectably married, and everybody know about it instead of everybody guessing about her relations to you, and putting scandalous interpretations upon them, as they would be bound to do if you were secretly married.

The idea that you and the girl could be married and still keep up the pretense of just being an engaged couple is preposterous. If you were only going to make a discreet call upon her, and take her out for an hour or two now and then, there would be no object in being married. Men and women get married because they want to be together. And unless it is publicly known that they have a perfect right to be together it sets every tongue wagging.

The girl's father and brother are perfectly right to object to a secret marriage, and they show their knowledge of the world by refusing to consent to one. There is always a little smear of scandal about a secret marriage, and nobody ever quite believes in a belated marriage certificate.

Lots of young people who are desperately in love with each other feel that they cannot afford to marry, but they cannot settle the problem by a secret marriage. Far better for them to have the courage to go into the adventure openly and boldly, and for the girl to go to work and help finance the romance that, in that way, they can keep clean instead of dragging it through the mire. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—War has already begun between my sweetheart and myself about where we shall live after we are married. She wants to go far away from her mother and I want to settle close by her mother because I think a good mother-in-law is next to a good mother. God bless the old lady, anyway. Now, Miss Dix, Your Honor, you know that if mamma got sick she would want her baby with her, and if Sally got sick she would want mamma with her, and besides, if I was near I could haul mamma a load of wood occasionally, and fix her windmill, and keep her fences up, and mamma could have dinner with us on Sundays, and all would be happy. Besides, I tell Sally that the boogey man will get us if we go way off in a strange country. Now which one of us is right? F. F. C.
