Sunday School Lesson

Saul, David and Solomon Compared
Sept. 26 Sunday School

"Man looketh on the outward appearance, but Jehovah looketh on the heart."—1. Samuel 16:7.—Golden Text.

Saul, the first king of the Israelites, was chosen because the people demanded a king that they might be like the rest of the peoples living near them, and have a leader to lead them in their battles. Also because Samuel the prophet anointed him the one chosen by God. He died on the field of battle after having fought the Philistines all his life.

Saul's character was not the kind that good and wise rulers possess. He could not bear to have any one praised more than himself. He was self-willed, a man who would take no advice, follow no will but his own. He was fickle: at one time he honored David and said he loved him. He was half-hearted in God's service; he cared more for his position than he did for the favor of God. These qualities led to actions which lost him the respect of the prophet and of his people. In spite of his success as a leader in battle the people lost faith in him and his kingdom became unsettled, disunited and weak, so that the Philistines were able to inflict a crushing defeat upon them.

David became king through the call of God, but he had to wait long for his throne and won it after great hardships.

David was a strong ruler: he put down the Philistines, crushed rebellion, compelled the people to obey. He was a deeply religious man, praying open and fast; he had a honor to God. He sinned, but unlike Saul he was penitent. He was generous to his friends and to enemies, lavishing kindness upon both. He was tactful in managing other men, knowing how to bear and be patient for the sake of the best interests of the nation. He ruled with a strength that was softened by kindness and mercy, and a piety that was sincere. And therefore they respected and loved him, and his nations reached a unity and strength that had never before possessed.

Solomon came to the throne in the easiest of ways—by birth and the will of his father. With his rule we pass into a new atmosphere in the history of the Israelites. It was largely marked by peace. It was marked also by luxury; Solomon's house was a beautiful palace; he wore gorgeous raiment, and lived always in great state. The dreams of national prosperity were realized and the great temple called Solomon's Temple was erected and opened for worship. Solomon was noted for his wisdom; he was skillful in judgment and some of his decisions became famous throughout the world. But the end of his rule was marked by a great decline. Abundance, pleasure and riches softened the people, weakened their devotion to God and led to the building of shrines for idols throughout the land. Solomon's rule made the nation prosperous, rich, famous, but it created evils that if uncorrected were found to destroy all the prosperity won.

Which of these things do you like the best? Most of you will answer "David." He was so heroic and big-hearted, but which of these things shall we follow? They were all great and did great things, but they all had great faults and committed great sins. We cannot make any one of them our hero. There is only one King whom we can reverence with all our hearts and implicitly follow—Jesus Christ. "One greater than Solomon is here." And we agree. He is greater—the greatest King of all. Him only we will follow. Him only we will serve.

"Saul is commonly regarded as a disobedient, self-willed tyrant, one who forsook God and was forsaken by God in return. He is contrasted with David, and while the latter is spoken of as the 'man of God's own heart,' the type of a faithful ruler and good shepherd of the people, Saul is regarded as the special object of divine displeasure. It is true that there was much evil in his life there were dark and calamitous epochs. But nevertheless brighter and purer traits at times gleamed forth, and in spite of all that is sad and sinful some tender associations twine around his memory.

"Though chosen by God, he was chosen in conformity with popular ideas, and as a 'present' of the ruler more than the 'past' of the national life. His qualities were those which attract the popular admiration. Tallness of stature and superiority in bodily strength were, in the early ages qualities that raised men to the command of their fellows, and the especially commended Saul to the people of Israel.

"He at first was reluctant to take upon himself so great a responsibility, different of occupying an exalted position. After his election and anointing he withdrew into his former obscurity, and men began to murmur and fancy it was but a mock king they had elected after all. But a sudden occurrence aroused his sluggish nature and awoke his dormant energies. The man of Jabesh-Gilead, sore pressed by the king of Ammon, sent forth an urgent appeal for help. It reached Saul, and so promptly did he respond to it, and swift and complete was the deliverance he achieved for them, that there were no more murmurers and malcontents in Israel, and no more doubts about the merits of the newly chosen king. Then followed a period in which he carried on a succession of wars, the issue of which secured the independence of his country.

"But on more than one occasion he had shown an arbitrary temper, a tendency to impatience and self-will. And when at length he was guilty of a flagrant breach of the divine commandment in reference to the treatment of the Amalekites, it was finally announced by the God's prophet, that because he had rejected the word of the Lord the Lord had also rejected him from being king.

"From that day forward a shadow fell upon Saul, and the rest of his life was passed in darkness and eclipse. A continual restlessness now possessed him. Strange fears and jealousies haunted him. He was by fits passionate, vindictive, remorseful, tender. His morbid spirit, ever brooding and ever preying on itself, yielded to the fatal disease, and the great warrior-king was at frequent intervals a moody madman in his royal halls. The spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him.

"At last the fatal morrow dawned on the heights of Gibeon, and the fierce fight was fought on these sunny slopes. And so as the historian with impressive brevity describes it: 'Saul died, and his three sons, and his armour-bearer, and all his men, that same day together.' 'Surely there can be nothing more tragic than the picture of that poor, debased king vainly, in the hour of his need, appealing to mute altar and unprofitable sacrifices, and at last in his despair, taking counsel of sorcery and witchcraft.

"Many a life opens like Saul's full of rich and bright promise, and like his terminates in disaster, failure and ignominy.

David the second king, was the greatest king Israel ever had. Five qualities marked him, as a young man. First of all, when he was not fighting but a shepherd boy, he showed fidelity in the ordinary duties of every-day life. Here is the summing up of his method: 'And David had loved himself wisely in all his ways and the Lord was with him.' Then he showed courage and high resolve in the face of danger. In his contest with Goliath we see religious faith contributing to his courage. It was moral strength pitted against brute force. Third, he showed a fine capacity for friendship with men. 'His soul was knit with the soul of Jonathan and he loved him as he loved his own soul.' Fourth he was a greathearted and generous to his enemies. There were months when he was hunted through the hills of Judea by the hirelings of Saul, as if he had been a mad dog, but when he had Saul within his power he refused to strike."

YOUTHFUL IN BODY AND MIND

Never mind your age—as measured by years. How do you feel? That's the thing that counts! Men scarcely in their thirties—haggard, listless, weak, nervous—men who take no interest in life, just dragging out a weary existence, all in, tired and worn out. Though young in years, they are, nevertheless, old men. Their vital forces are on the wane. They've lost their "punch" and "pep." They feel old—and they look it! Stay young by keeping your body fit. Keep your nerves, stomach, bowels, liver, kidneys and bladder healthy and active. Build up your strength and health. Nothing will accomplish these results better than
