Don't Expect Perfect Mates Dorothy Dix All of Us Have Many Faults

Count the Virtues of the Wife or Husband and be Thankful for Them; Lucky Indeed is One Who Finds His Mate Coming Anywhere Near His Expectation When He Married

The reason why there are so many disgruntled husbands and wives who, as the phrase goes, are "disappointed" in marriage is because they demand too many perfections in their mates. They are not satisfied with one set of charms and virtues in the one individual to whom they are united. They expect them all, and for one poor, weak human being to possess a dozen different antagonistic qualities.

No doubt this is at the bottom of the divorce evil and is what keeps men and women swapping husbands and wives in a frantic search for a life partner who can write checks with one hand and poetry with the other, who will be Marianne in the parlor and Mary Jane in the kitchen. Needless to say, these three-in-ones, who are good for whatever ails a yearning soul and a restless fancy, are as scarce as hen's teeth. But the quest for them goes merrily on to the scandal of the community and the prosperity of Reno and its rivals.

Sometimes it makes you think that the polygamists and polyandrists do these things better. At least, when a polygamist desires a blond wife or a brunette one, or a wife who is glamorous or one who is a good, hard worker, or a wife who has the beauty of youth or the wisdom of age, he marries half a dozen different women, each of whom possesses the quality he admires. He expects one woman to be a human chameleon who can turn herself into whatever he wants at the moment.

Waiting for Her

Adieux were short, for which Sonny was grateful. Terry had no opportunity to say anything about the night before. He carried the whole situation of rather well, Allison thought. And she was conscious of being decidedly hungry. But she would not have sat there with Terry for all the money in the world. She just wanted to get away.

The drive out to the airport was tedious, and the boys tried to find out from Allison what had happened, but she was noncommittal. "That's it — they always protect Terry. If it were me — well, the whole crowd would know all the details," Jim grumbled.

"There is really nothing to tell," she said. Nor could Jim understand why Sonny went straight to the restaurant for breakfast when they got to the airport. And Sonny could not know that Terry had waited with his door open for an hour that morning until he had the complaint of her room, just to make his apologies seem casual.

CHAPTER IX

It was early in May that Allison learned she was to be changed over to the sleeper jump for the summer. They were switching everybody around.

Nobody wanted the night hop from Newark to Chicago. It cut into time in such a way that the boys complained they never got any sleep.

Out of Newark at 2 A. M., then into Chicago before daylight, they never got around to bed there. And on the trip back to Newark, they always figured they'd all go home and straight to bed the moment they landed.

But somehow they never did. Allison did not mind the night shift, but she did hate the possibility of leaving Phil and Jim. I tell you I'll strike if I get that night run again this Summer. I've served my time. Let somebody else take it!" Jim had said when he heard of the shift.

"But they'll make me go, and I'd be just sick to be transferred from you two!" Allison cried.

"Say, Sonny, I'll fight like a wildcat if they try and take you away from us. We work like clockwork. Never a murmur. You can't spoil a combination like ours!" they had both agreed.

And that made Sonny very happy. She valued their respect. It was worth the trouble she had to go through. And she had tried hard. Sometimes she thought of Mr. Roerden and hoped he had inquired about her. She felt sure he had, and she would have liked to talk to him about her work. Doing well was the only way she could thank him.

Jim was satisfied he complained to the operations manager and announced loudly he wanted Sonny kept with him. But the situation looked bad for Jim.

"I could use the money, of course. It means more dough; but after all there's something to life besides money!" he grumbled to Sonny. "Don't you agree, Green Eyes?" Jim always called her that when he was serious.

"I suppose there is, but a little money is nice." "Enough money is nice. But I learned long ago that when you're in the money, there is always somebody to take it away from you. You never can turn down anybody when I've got $50 in my pockets. That's why Mrs. Barnes keeps me to herself!"

But in spite of all protests, Barnes and Steve, with Sonny, were ordered to the Sleeper Jump.

Sleeper Jump The first night out, Sonny came to the airport early. Partially because her mother was so nervous about her flying at night. They had had quite an argument about it.

"But, mother, it is perfectly safe, safer than walking across the street!" Sonny protested. "You have been such a brick about it all. You must not worry. It will make me miserable if I know you are home here worrying about me."

It seemed queer to be going out to the airport at midnight. It was a warm Spring night, which gave

The task of stringing beads with very small holes can be made very simple, if the cord is first twisted tightly and the end dipped in household cement or glue. When dry, the cord will pass through the holes very easily.

ADD EGG YOLKS CAREFULLY

When adding egg yolks to hot sauces to keep the egg from cooking too rapidly and shredding, beat the yolks thoroughly first and add a spoonful or two of the hot liquid to the yolks, then turn into the hot mixture.

LONG SLEEVES IN SPORTS SHIRTS

Based on its acceptance as a resort fashion, the long-sleeved idea in sports shirts is scheduled as a trend to watch for the coming summer. While softening influences have crept into the sports blouses picture, and there is a good deal more of the dressmaker type of blouse worn with slacks and shorts, observations at Palm Beach last winter indicate that it is a more or less classic type of shirt which is still the big favorite with the best dressed woman.

Lace bodices with bouffant net skirts in bright shades, such as turquoise, pink and green are popular for summer evening frocks.

Before she left for Newcastle the Queen visited the British Industries Fair at Olympia. Queen Mary paid three visits on three succeeding days to the Fair, and Her Majesty kept up her reputation for thoroughness by spending between three and four hours at the Fair each day. The Princess Royal the Duke of Kent, and the Duchess of Gloucester, went with Her Majesty on one or other of her tours.

Queen Mary's interest in the exhibits ranged from combs made in the shape of Mr. Chamberlain's umbrella to work-boxes and tea sets. If she was tired after her prolonged trips—she visited sixty-four stalls on one day, thus beating her previous record—she showed no signs of it, and her interest in everything she saw was keen towards the end of her visit as when she started (says the Observer).

Modern Etiquette (By ROBERTA LEE) Q. Is it necessary that a telegram of congratulation received at a wedding be acknowledged? A. This does not necessitate the note of thanks required by a gift, but the first time one meets the sender of the telegram, a few words of appreciation should be expressed. Q. # Five Dionnes all Set to Meet King and Queen

Private Railroad Car Will Whisk Quints to Toronto on Their First Trip Beyond Nursery Gates

BY PAUL ROSS
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

NORTH BAY, Ont., May 21.—The climax to that modern fairy-tale—the story of the Quintuplets will come on the night of May 21. For the first time in their lives the little girls will leave their home and start down to Toronto, Ont., to meet the King and Queen of England. It will be their first glimpse of the great world outside.

The Dafoe nursery has been like a castle these five years, a castle where five precious princesses were watched over by the good fairy, Science, where strong gates and stalwart men guarded them from the dragons of Disease, Curiosity and Thoughtlessness. But, on the fateful night of May 21, the wiremesh gates of the Dafoe nursery will swing open and the five princesses will be whisked off in a many-cylindere chariot.

At Callander, they will climb aboard a wonderful caravan, called a railroad train, which will speed them on. The next morning they will wake up in a great city, and they who have seen only a few people and the simple structures of the nursery grounds will behold a crowd of high buildings and automobiles and trains. Quint life will never be the same.

When it was settled that the Quints would go to see the King and Queen, the Ontario government, which is charged with the care of the children, decided to carry them in equipment owned by the government. Accordingly, the T. & N. O. R. R. facilities were enlisted and the private car of the road's general manager was selected to ride the Quints. Formerly it was known as No. 200. Now it is "The Dafoe Nursery."

CAR MADE OVER The car has been fumigated, repainted and changed over to two of its three bedrooms, which used to have one bed each, now boast two cots each. The cots are Quint size, of course. The third bedroom contains one cot and one bed, the latter for the use of the nurse who will sleep with the children in accordance with Dafoe nursery custom. The dining room in the car has been refurbished with Quints size chairs and tables. The railway has been rigged to provide the children with meals of the customary caliber and type. The bathroom, containing tub and shower, has been made ready to maintain Quint standards of cleanliness. Nurse O'Shaughnessy and Courtisban, Teacher Vesins and Housekeeper Cook - Aunt Grace Demers will accompany the Quints in this car.

Father and Mother Dionne, all the other Dionne children and one or two close friends of the Dionne family, will occupy another car on the Quint Special. A third car will be used by the girls' board of guardians and a fourth will carry newspapermen. Finally, there will be a diner for the grow folks. The train will be drawn by one of the T. & N. O.'s best engines. Toronto Police will be under the protection of the Ontario Provincial Police.

The King and Queen are scheduled to make an appearance at Woodbine racetrack in Toronto, to watch the 80th running of the historic King's Plate race. This will draw a large part of the crowd to the track. At an appropriate moment, the Quints will be switched to an automobile and taken to the private chambers of the Premier of Ontario, in the Parliament buildings.

AND SO TO BED Either just before the race or just after it the King and Queen will meet the Quints. The meeting will take place in the reception room of the Lieutenant-Governor's suite. Nobody but the royal pair, two ladies-in-waiting, the Quints, their parents and one of their nurses will be present.

When the reception is over, the children will be taken back to their Dafoe - nursery - on-wheels. Toronto is to the Quints what India, Bali and the South Sea Islands are to the average person. One of their favorite games has been the one where they hold their little toy suitcases, sit down on chairs and pretend they are going to Toronto. Once, when Nurse O'Shaughnessy was preparing for a week-end there, Yvonne declared she would hide in the nurse's bag and go along.

ALL IN WHITE Several factors have contributed toward making prospects of the trip even more exciting. There is the beautiful white dress which each Quint will wear when all are received by the King and Queen. A dressmaker from a famous store in Toronto came several times for fittings, just as is done with frocks for grown-up girls. White socks, white slippers and a little white hat that sits on the back of a Quint's head complete the outfit.

Finally, there is the business of practicing for the reception. It has become a delightful game. Nurse O'Shaughnessy sits down in a chair and says, "Now I'm the Queen and you must curtsy for me." So the kids perform the Quint version of a royal curtsy. That is, all except Emilie who has been putting everybody in stitches. For she, the rugged individualist and wit, stands on her head when nurse asks for a curtsy. Nurse O'Shaughnessy is convinced Emilie will do a head-stand on being presented to the Queen.
