Pasture Demonstration

Dairy cattle grazed on fertilized pasture yielded 823 pounds of milk per acre more than on unfertilized fields, according to results of standard pasture improvement demonstrations carried out on 2 illustration Stations established by the Dominion Experimental Farms. As typical examples of these methods of increasing the value of pasture, two adjoining fields of three acres each on representative pasture land were selected and fenced separately. On field was unfertilized, and the other receivd early in spring 100 pounds of nitrate of soda, 350 pounds of superphosphate, and 100 pounds of potash per acre. In June 50 pounds of nitrate of soda were added. On these fields the cattle were grazed alternately.

Apple Export Certificates

Many certificates of origin accompanying the shipments of apples are arriving at British ports unsigned and otherwise improperly filled in. This neglect has resulted in payment of duty before release by the Customs; has caused great inconvenience, and, as the Dominion Fruit Branch states, will impair not only the marketing prospects but also the net returns. Exporters, who are in any doubt as to the proper filling in of the information required for the certificate of origin, are invited to address an enquiry to the Dominion Fruit Branch, Ottawa.

U. M. W. MINERS

Murdock Wilson, Chairman of the Special Committee representing the men, cautioned the workers to give full consideration to the new rates.

Amid shouts of "toss it in the waste basket," "vote the cut down," and "fight the company to a standstill," the canny Scotsman rose from his chair. James W. MacKay, Chairman of the meeting, pounded his gavel but order was not restored until Wilson raised his hand.

Serious

"Boys," he said, "this is serious. You can't pass this off as a joke. The report is here to be discussed. Be square with yourselves and every man in the mines."

But his words were unheeded. "If you accept this cut," shouted William Baudeaux, shaking his fist, "how can you go home and look your wife and children in the face?"

Baudeaux, a member of the U. M. W., sat down and Albert Trott, a member of the Amalgamated Mine Workers, rival union, jumped up to move the report of the committee be left over for discussion. The motion carried to be followed by a warning from Bernard Martin, one of the committee.

"I can see dirty work starting right now," he said. "Let us leave fighting between the two unions alone. Let us discuss these things like men for once. We don't want to start a riot."

Another U. M. W. member, Jack Kennedy, urged the miners not to consider the offer "in any way or form." He urged the cut be rejected and suggested there be no discussion whatever.

Heated discussion arose between members of the two factions and with Jack Kennedy's declaration that "we don't want to vote here today anyway," members of the U. M. W. surged out the doors.

The meeting quieted down and it was decided to take a ballot "some day next week."

APPLE EXPORT CERTIFICATES . FREIGHT TRAFFIC INCREASE

SYDNEY, N. S., Nov. 21—(C.P.)—Freight traffic to Sydney so far this year shows an increase of 25 percent over the corresponding months of last year, Canadian National Railway officials announced today. Water-borne freight also was the greatest volume in many years.

Recommendations Of Newfoundland Commission

OTTAWA, Nov. 21—(C.P.)—The following are the main recommendations of the Royal Commission investigating Newfoundland finances:

1. The Constitution of Newfoundland to be changed from a self-governing Dominion to a Colony under the general supervision of the United Kingdom until the Island becomes self-governing again.

2. The Newfoundland Parliament to be suspended. Full legislative and executive power to be placed in the Governor, acting on the advice of a special commission of six, three to be appointed by the United Kingdom and three by Newfoundland.

3. The Governor would be responsible to the United Kingdom Government.

4. The Newfoundland members of the Commission would be paid by Newfoundland. The United Kingdom members by the United Kingdom.

5. Laws would be enacted by the Governor on the advice of the Commission. Laws would take immediate effect on enactment but powers of disallowance would be made in the King. Laws now in effect in Newfoundland would continue until tried or repealed.

6. In powers of emergency, the Governor might act on his own initiative. In general executive matters, he would act on the advice of the Commission.

7. Members of the Commission would have charge of Government Departments.

8. In all matters, a majority of the Commissioners and the Governor would decide a question.

9. A vice chairman of the Commission would be appointed from the Newfoundland members

10. In the absence of the Governor, his duties would be fulfilled by the Chief Justice of Newfoundland.

The following recommendations deal with proposed financial changes:

11. Because Newfoundland is unable to provide the service of its debt. General supervision supervision of the finances would be assumed by the United Kingdom, until such time as Newfoundland might be self-supporting again.

12. Holders of Newfoundland bonds, other than pre-war dollar loans ($854,750) and the 5 1-2 per cent prosperity loan of 1932 ($2,500,000) and a 4 per cent inscribed stock (sterling repayable in 1935 (£164,566) would be offered by Newfoundland the right to exchange their bonds or stocks for new sterling stock bearing interest at three per cent. redeemable at any time after 10 years at the option of Newfoundland and not to be outstanding longer than 30 years. Guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the United Kingdom the new stock would be a trustee security of the United Kingdom.

13. Provision would be made for establishment of a sinking fund of one per cent per annum in respect of the new stock. To commence not later than five years from the date of issue, the annual appropriations to be guaranteed by the United Kingdom.

14. Exchange would be made on the basis of £1000 of the new stock for every £100 of nominal value of the existing bonds or stocks if expressed in sterling or in the case of dollar bonds with the right of payment in sterling for every £100 of the nominal sterling equivalent at the fixed rate of exchange specified in the bonds ($4.85 2-3 to the £).

15. In the legislation to be introduced by Newfoundland authorizing the new loan, it would be provided that bond holders affected (other than holders of loans which are trustee securities in the United Kingdom, who had not agreed to the offer in one month, would receive no interest or principal so long as (a) any payment continues to be made by the United Kingdom in respect of their guarantee of interest and sinking fund of the new three percent or (b) there remains outstanding any obligation by the Newfoundland Government to the United Kingdom on account of advances.

17. The advances made to Newfoundland in Dec. 1932 and June 1913 and any made during the next three years, would be credited as free grants. After that date, terms might be imposed by the United Kingdom.

17. Holders of the following portions of the existing debt would receive special treatment:—

(1) Loans which are trustee securities in the United Kingdom, these comprise three 3 1-2 per cent sterling loans 1905, 1010 and 1912 redeemable in 1945, 1950 and 1952 respectively and five percent sterling loan 1923 redeemable in 1943. Total amount is £2,014,000.

It is proposed that legislation should be passed by Newfoundland Parliament making these securities a first charge on revenue and assets. Provision would be included in legislation to be introduced at Westminster for advances to be made out of moneys to be voted by parliament of such amounts as may be required to enable the Newfoundland Government to meet the service of these securities during the continuance of the proposed arrangements.

Holders of these stocks who do not accept the offer of conversion into new guaranteed loan would therefore retain their existing holdings and continue to receive interest at the same rate as hitherto under above.

(2) Outstanding pre-war dollar loans:—

A small portion of pre-war debt (854,750) consisting of 4 per cent Newfoundland dollar bonds. It is proposed that these should be repaid forthwith at full nominal value in Canadian dollars, the necessary cash to be provided at an issue by the Newfoundland Government of new guaranteed three per cent stock.

(3) Specially secured loans.

(a) The prosperity loan 1932 amounting to $2,500,000 at 5 1-2 per cent is repayable at any time. As it is specially secured on the proceeds of the petroleum monopoly, it is intended that it should be paid off at once, the necessary cash to be provided as in (2) above.

(b) It is intended that advances which have been made to the Newfoundland Government by local banks and which are specially secured by a general lien on customs receipts of the Island should be paid forthwith. The necessary cash being raised in the manner indicated above.

(c) £164,566 four per cent isscribed stock (sterling) repayable in 1935. This is the outstanding balance of an issue of £550,000 in 1895 secured by a statutory sinking fund held in London. It is proposed that this stock should be repaid forthwith at par, any necessary cash beyond the amount available in the sinking fund being raised in the manner indicated above.

Interest payment falling due 1st Jauary 1934.

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, would propose to submit to parliament an estimate to provide for an advance to the Government of Newfoundland of such an amount as may be necessary to enable payment to be made:

(1) To holders of loans which are already trustee securities of the United Kingdom, of interest due 1st January 1934, on due date.

(11) To other holders of the debt to whom the present conversion offer is intended to apply and who accept that offer of interest at such rates as they would have received on 1st January if conversion had been carried through before that date. Payment of interest in these cases would be made to individual stock and bondholders as soon as may be after they had complied with the procedure for converting their holdings ing on wealth created by the people." In another embittered murmur he said, "you are a gang of lazy, idle parasites. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves."

Glances in Direction

The King glanced in the direction of McGovern as his voice rang through the chamber with his opening interjection. Then without pausing His Majesty handed the copy of the speech to the Lord Chancellor, waiting on bended knee, turned and escorted Her Majesty from the chamber. No other notice was taken of the incident.

What aroused the ire of the fiery leftwinger was the brilliant scene in the House of Lords, following on the great state procession of the King and Queen to Westminster. McGovern said afterwards to newspapermen that he had no regret for his outburst. "I was so filled with indignation at the sight of all this colossal show that I could not stand it any longer and I simply had to express my thoughts," he explained.

As the House of Commons assembled after the formal opening in the House of Lords disarmament was immediately made an issue. Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald made it plain the United Kingdom would continue efforts in international collaboration for a disarmament agreement.

"Geneva has not gone fast," he admitted, "but who could expect them to do so, remembering the enormous variety and intricacy of the subjects handled, and by more than 60 nations." The lower house was unusually crowded, probably in anticipation of a sequel to the incident in the Upper Chamber, but McGovern himself did not take his seat and there was no reference to the outburst.

Ironically Cheered

The Liberals under Sir Herbert Samuel were ironically cheered as they formally crossed the floor to the opposition benches, abandoning their previous neutrality largely because of dissatisfaction with the government's record in disarmament efforts.

As the House began debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne the Prime Minister amplified the declarations contained in the speech. In general remarks George Lansbury, the veteran Labor leader, complained no mention was made in the speech of the trade negotiations with Russia, and he asserted the failure of the World Economic Conference was almost a crime.

The Prime Minister described the European situation today as a continuation of the aftermath of war and the peace treaties. "So far as we are concerned," in reference to disarmament, "we were never under the delusion that an agreement the proposal would be satisfactory to the United Kingdom Government which would advance the necessary financial assistance to assure the Colony's solvency.

United Kingdom Stand

"His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom would think it little less than a disaster if the oldest colony in the British Empire were to default on its obligations," the paper stated. "While greatly regretting the situation which has arisen, they feel it impossible to dissent from the main conclusions and recommendations at which the Commission has unanimously arrived."

Premier Alderdice has not yet definitely expressed the attitude of the Government but in an interview today in St. John's, indicated that the Commission's recommendations would be accepted as being in the best interests of the country.

The proposal would set up a commission of six commissioners to replace the present legislative machinery of Newfoundland, and to act under the Governor of the colony. The commission would be appointed by the Crown, three to be residents of the United Kingdom and three from Newfoundland. Each group to be remunerated by their respective governments.

Outstanding obligations of the colony in bonds and other securities would be exchanged or converted as they mature, into others bearing a lower interest rate, while funds to meet present deficits would be advanced at once by the United Kingdom government. The advances in this respect would be a free grant for the first three years.

Imminent Peril

Only such action as recommended would save the country "from the imminent peril of financial collapse," the commission declared, after reviewing a history of financial reverses ranging continuously back to 1920, the last year the budget was balanced.

With an average annual revenue of around $9,000,000 there had been an annual average deficit of $2,000,000 during the 12 years ended with 1932. For the current fiscal year, 1933-34, the commission estimated a deficit approaching $3,000,000, and a total public-debt of $101,000,000, amounting to $400 per capita.

While the political and financial recommendation was the main feature of the report, numerous subsidiary recommendations were made, designed to modernize and improve the whole economic life of the colony in all its aspects, and bring about a measure of prosperity to its widely scattered inhabitants.

on disarmament which is not a full agreement internationally would be of much use in establishing peace on a secure basis," Mr. MacDonald went on.

"In March it was possible to produce a plan related to the minds and needs of the nations so far as they had been revealed at Geneva. The British Government stands up boldly to the assertion the plan was a substantial one, and if it had been carried out it would have been a great contribution to involving complete disarmament.

"That structure however was shaken by political events culminating in Germany giving notice she would leave the conference and the League. That the conference should be carried on was never in question; the only matter for any doubt being what was best to do immediately.

"Sir John Simon (Foreign Secretary) and the Under-Secretary last week returned to Geneva and took part in a series of profitable and amicable consultations with leading representatives of the states there present.

"Sir John, returning today, is able to report there is a determined spirit of cooperation at Geneva, and no intention of allowing disarmament to die or fail."

The Prime Minister said Sir John went to Geneva as a representative of the entire cabinet. "We are entitled to claim British help is doing much to bring about that united effort necessary to ultimate success," he added.

"We hope Germany may join these diplomatic exchanges and France and Italy will continue their efforts. Of course we will continue to act in close touch with the United States."

He concluded with a reference to what he described as a very unbalanced attack by the opposition against private armament firms in Britain, in which it had been charged Britain supplied one-third of the total export trade in armaments.

That was an exaggeration of the grossest character, said the Prime Minister, "which becomes almost fantastic." The Sheffield Chamber of Commerce stated that what made the so-called armament firms very busy in October was work connected with hydrogenation and industrial works

Nothing To Say

"No. I have nothing to say," when Magistrate J. L. Barnhill asked him if he had any comment to make.

Contradictory evidence startled the court as Mrs. Bertha Hamilton's story of an utterance by MacDonald was refuted later by detective John Stevenson.

The woman unfolded a story of the accused, clad only in a pair of ill-fitting trousers, staggering into her home with a bludgeon in his hand the night of the slaying, and telling her husband:

"This is the thing that done the deed." Then, she said, he told of hitting a woman with the club.

This information, she said, had been told by her late husband to detective Stevenson who under cross-examination made the denial.

Club Recovered

The club, however, was recovered by police from a pile of brush in the backyard where Mrs. Hamilton said her husband had hid it from the accused.

Other witnesses told of finding the girl's form in a garage doorway at the height of a thunderstorm, described her usual habits of going home after work, the route usually followed and testified as to technical details of the case.

Ernest Hewing, a colored witness, told the court he had been awakened by poundings on his door on the night the girl's body was found, and had gone down to find "Red" there with a big club in his hand. Accused, however, merely demanded a cigarette and left.

"I wouldn't say he was drunk," Hewing said hesitantly. "and I wouldn't say he was sober."

OPENING OF NEW LIBRARY AT ALBERTON

The new Carnegie Library at Alberton was opened last evening There was a very large attendance of people from the surrounding districts. Mr. E. O. Barbour acted as chairman and introduced the speakers. He expressed his pleasure at Alberton having been chosen as the library centre for that part of Prince County.

Miss Bateson gave a very comprehensive review of the work of the Carnegie Corporation and expressed pleasure at the efforts the Alberton people had made in connection with the new library. She stressed the importance of good reading to educate young and old wait until dawn showed them the way out.

Mr. J. F. Arnett, who represented the Premier, who was not able to attend, congratulated the people of Alberton on having this wonderful library at their disposal. He congratulated Premier McMillan on his success in being able to bring the benefits of the Carnegie Library to the people of the province, Mr. A. E. McLean, M.P., also expressed pleasure in seeing Alberton enjoying such good fortune. Among other speakers were Mr. B. W. Robinson, Rev. Mr. Weir, Mr. C. Cameron, Mr. Birch and Mr. James O. Burke.

Settle said he knew where he was and rather than take a chance on crossing the Bay with his diminishing gas, he pulled the rip panel and down they came.

As they struck the ground Major Fordney, who was leaning out of the port hold, was jolted out of the Gondola into the oozy mud and got a wetting.

Settle said they reached their greatest altitude which they figured was 59,000 feet, over McConnelsburg, P.a., which, incidentally, is one of the highest spots in Southern Pennsylvania.

Reaches Farm House

At sun-up today Settle stayed with the balloon while Fordney floundered to dry land and trudged to the farm house of Samuel N. Johnson, two miles away, to make known they were safe. The Johnsons gave him breakfast and prepared some food for Commander Settle.

Settle turned over to Professor R. J. Stephenson of the University of Chicago, the scientific equipment which they had taken aloft. "I hope we brought something worth while for you," he said as he handed it over.

Telling over and over again to newcomers details of the flight, Settle said the balloon held 110,000 cubic feet of gas when he took off from Akron at 9.27 a. m. yesterday, and that 50,000 feet remained before the rip panel was pulled just before the landing.

Relates Experiences

After Commander Settle had taken off for Washington, Major Fordney said "the experience in the stratosphere was very interesting. It is a region with very little change in temperature. The lowest inside our Gondola was about 45 degrees above zero." He did not know what the outside temperature was because the automatic recording instruments had not been examined.

"As for weather, there isn't any," said the Major. "It's static all the time, with no clouds and no rain. The sky is beautiful, and there is perpetual sunshine. The clouds below looked to us just as they do from the earth.

"We had occasional glimpses of the earth, but only through a haze, and we could only make out the outline of the main topographic features. We were not high enough to notice the curvature of the earth.

"The Commander was very busy with the navigation, and my job was making as many scientific observations as possible. I went up specifically for that.

"We didn't have time while up there to stop a moment and try to gauge a personal reaction. There was no time to indulge in emotions. We didn't get as much data as we would have liked to have gotten at any point, and there was very little time spent in looking out the portholes at the sky."
