THERE is such a simple easy way of washing rompers, school gingham, play clothes, etc., that you won't mind how many there are— thanks to Rinso. Rinso is a wonderful product, scientifically made to wash clothes by soaking— different from soaps, chips and washing powders, and used differently. Do not put Rinso into the tub from the package, but make the Rinso liquid first.

A Sweetheart At Thirty

THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRANSFORMATION
By Marion Rubincam
THE CLIMAX
Chapter 97

I'll never forget those few days following that Christmas. The special morning when Esther and myself came perilously near a quarrel is particularly clear to me. For it was another milestone in my career. Before, I would never have dared answer her as I did, indeed, for some years while I was living with her, I would scarcely have dared to disagree with her—even mentally—while as for standing up and telling her she was wrong! Well, I could not have done it. But now I was out of my shell, I re-made myself, and I was happy. I had sufficiently developed myself, in a comparatively short time, to a point where I could take my place by the side of such a man as Francis. Meantime, I was happy—far happier than I ever thought it was possible to be. I wanted to give some of this to Esther. Why shouldn't she do what I had done? I looked at her—but no, there was a certain complacency, a certain stubbornness about her. I believe she liked being what she was. "Jim won't ever consent to marrying me," she said finally. And in her tones was that curious pleasure which I never could understand. Some women who are well meaning and charitable and "good" have this incomprehensible quality—a certain vague pleasure in giving pain to others. It is because they have let bitterness and disappointment eat into their souls, and where they have missed something sweet in life, they grudge it to others. I had seen this in Esther before—but if Jim who hated the Earl soils, intended to make things unpleasant—and if Esther intended to back him up, why, it only made the whole affair harder for us. "She might marry without his consent," I answered. "After all she's no child. And this is the twentieth century. Jim thinks

A headache is frequently caused by badly digested food; the gases and acids resulting therefrom are absorbed by the blood which in turn irritates the nerves and causes painful symptoms called headache, neuralgia, rheumatism, etc. 15 to 30 drops of Mother Seigel's Syrup will correct faulty digestion and afford relief.

Gains 35 Pounds; Rheumatism Is Gone

The wonderful reconstructive powers of Tania are again very forcefully demonstrated. In this instance the grateful beneficiary is John H. King Locksmith living at 229 14th Ave., West, Calgary Alberta, who declares: "I built me up to good health with a gain of thirty five pounds in weight, over a year ago and I have been feeling fine ever since. Just after coming back from overseas, about two years ago, I was taken down with an attack of rheumatism that crippled me up so I couldn't work and sent me to a hospital for about ten months. "During this long siege of rheumatism I lost fifty-five pounds in weight, going down from one hundred and ten to only one hundred and five. I was just a shadow of my old self and had no strength or energy left. I was terribly run down and felt tired and exhausted all the time. "Finally I restored to Tania and got back on my feet so quick that it surprised me. It proved to be so well suited to my needs that by the time I finished the fourth bottle I was feeling a hundred per cent better. As a medicine and tonic to build a person up and make them feel right I don't believe Tania has an equal." Tania is sold by all good druggists.

sometimes we are back in medieval times." "She might, but I doubt it," Esther said. "I'm very sweet, but she is soft too and I don't think she would do anything directly against her father's orders." "I wouldn't. Violet's feminine charm was partly this sweet yieldingness—but the girl was very much in love highly romantic and quite apt to run off and marry Bud in spite of her family. "I'm going to send her through college," I told Esther. I haven't the money myself now but Francis likes her very much and he will gladly stand the cost of it. Only—I want to adopt her." It came as a surprise to me this statement of mine. I had thought that Violet and I were so close to each other in our relationship of aunt and niece that we could not be closer. But suddenly I knew I wanted to feel that she was my daughter—this child who had been in my arms when she was a day old and who had grown up more under my care than under her mother's. Violet almost was my child—it had been my influence since babyhood that had made her different from those others. Esther looked at me, her mouth opening a little, as it always did when she was surprised. "I'll never consent," she said, "taking refuge once more in Jim's proposed disagreeableness. "I'll get around Jim," I promised. "Will you consent?" "If Jim does," she said. "Esther!" I cried in sudden impatience. "Will you or not must you always go by what Jim says and thinks? Suppose he happened to be wrong." "I guess I know my duty, Enid Haines!" said Esther in a manner meant to be thoroughly crushing. And I did not answer. But that afternoon I managed to have a minute alone with Francis, and I told him what I wanted. "This is a big step to take without consulting you," I said. "But you told me once you wanted to send me on through college, and that you wouldn't mind her living with us." "I'd love to have her," he interrupted quickly. "But if you don't want me to accept her," I said, "I won't say anything more. I know my duty!" And I looked up at him and laughed at my own imitation of Esther. "Your duty is to be happy," he said, his eyes warm and tender as he looked at me. And mine to make you so. And if having Violet as an adopted child—" "I must get her away from those people!" I exclaimed. "Violet has great possibilities, but not unless someone helps her." "I know," he said, and kissed me to assure me that it was all right. He went home alone then, leaving me his big car and his driver, so I could take Esther around and show her the city. And it was not until evening that I could tell Violet about it. "It wouldn't be different from living with us as we had planned, I urged. Except that if I adopted you I would have the right to do things for you—the legal right. But if you feel that I am taking you away from your own family—" "I can love you both just as I love you now," Vi said sweetly. And put her arms around her mother and then me, and kissed us both. But I saw in her eyes that she was glad in many ways because of the new arrangement. And I too felt a little selfish pleasure at the idea. I might never have children of my own—but at least all Vi, with all her gold and blue beauty, all her sensitiveness and her fineness, her appreciation of the worth while things of life—was almost my child.
