Chemical Vine Killers Advocated

The use of chemical vine killers is advocated this year states a bulletin issued by the Potato Growers' Advisory Service.

Potato vines may be killed at any time during this month, the time depending on disease conditions and the size of the tubers. In no case should a field be permitted to remain green after the first of October. Furthermore, the vines should be dead for at least ten days before the tubers are dug.

These precautions, the bulletin states, will reduce the propagation of the tubers by late blight spores during the digging of the crop, and consequently will reduce the amount of late blight rot in the bins to a minimum. Many growers will find it necessary to kill off the vines to prevent over-ripening of the tubers while others will find it necessary to maintain growth through most of this month. In the latter case further applications of late blight fungicides and DDT are recommended.

work on the part of professionally trained workers and volunteer workers from the community at large. He outlined the role of the volunteer worker in social work agencies by serving on the membership or on the Board of Trustees of private welfare agencies so as to direct social welfare work in the community as a policy-making group for the agency and helping to decide how, where, when, funds are to be raised and expended.

He brought out methods of obtaining the services of volunteer workers, procedure in fitting them with certain jobs, the necessity of supervision of the work of volunteer workers by the professionally trained staff person, and short term training periods for volunteer workers before they are given responsibility on the job.

Dr. L. G. Gas of Sackville, N.B. addressed the luncheon meeting on the general subject of "Professional Standards."

He gave a few qualifications which underlie all professions. First the ability and willingness to work hard and patiently. Secondly, common sense, which is most necessary in all professions. Thirdly, love of the work he is doing on the part of the professional person.

He showed close relationship between the professions of social work and medicine, that of working with unfortunate people. The chief underlying principle which guides people in both professions is the welfare of the patient or client. The social worker must be concerned with problems other than economic need.

He said the most important part of man that social workers deal with is not the biological man, but man's mind and spirit, his thoughts, feelings, hopes, fears, loves and emotions. Man's personality needs are, as stated by the speaker, affection, a sense of belonging to work, or some place, a sense of independence from outside help in making his own decisions and in deciding his own pattern of life, a need for achievement, a need for recognition, the feeling that he counts for something, a need for self-esteem.

It fell about a mile and a half from this little flag stop on the Canadian National Railway branch line that runs between Quebec and La Malbaie.

There are no roads near this little stop, the nearest about 16 miles. One of the victims killed was Arthur D. Storke, New York, president and vice-president of the Kennecott Copper Company, and Arthur D. Storke, New York, who was to have succeeded Stannard this fall in the presidency of the company.

The three victims are believed to have been on their way to Sept Iles to look over the titanium deposits.

The paper company officials from St. Catharines, Ont., were E.J. Celnan and William Schouler, both identified also with the Ontario Paper Company.

Two provincial policemen were sent into the bush tonight to see that nothing is disturbed about the wreckage.

Enjoyed Re-Visit To Old Country

Mr. and Mrs. James O'Griffin, Summerside, returned to the Island after a three months' visit to the Old Country. They left on the 8th of June and returned aboard the Aquitania on the 24th of August. Mr. and Mrs. O'Griffin were greatly impressed with all the aspects of their vacation and particularly with the fine weather they enjoyed. It is reported to have been the driest summer in Great Britain in 63 years and Mr. O'Griffin's only regret was that he was unable to enjoy the "art of angling" due to the fact that all the streams of repute were extremely low, and not favorable to fishing.

The O'Griffins spent five weeks of their visit in Scotland and the remainder in touring England, in particular the southern counties. Edinburgh, Mr. O'Griffin's home city, was particularly attractive at this time of year and, in his own words, "the most beautiful city I have ever seen."

During a ten day's stay in London they visited the "bomb sites" and noted that even signs of rubble had been cleared but that very little re-building has as yet commenced. Grass and little bits of shrubbery are growing up in the cleared areas. It was suggested to Mr. O'Griffin that in some cases the reason construction has not as yet started is that new plans for whole areas and districts are in the embryo stage and when ready for building will provide "various 'show places' in London."

Transportation by bus in the Old Country was particularly enjoyable, stated Mr. O'Griffin. The services and convenience provided by this means of travel were indeed gratifying. Included in the fare between Edinburgh and London on one line were meals, refreshments, hotel accommodation and a running commentary by one of the attendants on all the points of historic interest along the route.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Griffin were not left without a fine display of English tradition. On their return to Canada aboard the luxurious Aquitania when they were just coming within sight of Canada at the port where the pilot was taken aboard, and when everybody was excitedly looking towards the coast to get their first glimpse of the old Englishman and his wife were among the jubilant passengers anticipating their first view of Canadian soil. Mr. and Mrs. O'Griffin at this moment were standing alongside the couple. Suddenly, when land was just about visible, Mr. O'Griffin noticed the old gentleman tap his wife on the shoulder and, to his amazement, he heard the old fellow roar "Come, come, dear, it's four o'clock. Time for a spot of tea."

bodies can be brought out. Possibly a special railway car can be hauled to the nearest place on the line and the bodies carried out to it.

The only ingress is by rail and so far only a few persons have been able to get to South of the coast, most of them by railway scooter or handcar.

Five section men working along the tracks were the first to reach the smashed plane.

One of them, Oscar Tremblay, saw the plane strike the high bluff or cliff that rises into the air behind the railway line. The line itself skirts the shore of the St. Lawrence.

The five men struggled through the bush to the plane.

Industrialists Among Victims

Three of the passengers killed were American industrialists, flying into the northeastern Quebec area where deposits of titanium ore have been discovered.

Two others were connected with the Quebec North Shore Paper Company and were from St. Catharines, Ont.

Most of the other passengers were residents of Quebec and other parts of the province. Two of them were in arms and another a young boy.

The Americans killed were E.J. Stannard and R.J. Foster of New York, president and vice-president of the Kennecott Copper Company, and Arthur D. Storke, New York, who was to have succeeded Stannard this fall in the presidency of the company.

The three victims are believed to have been on their way to Sept Iles to look over the titanium deposits.

Maritime School Discussed

In opening the discussion on the Maritime School of Social Work, Miss Montgomery, pointed out that there are in Canada only eight schools of social work, six in English and two in French. Seven of the schools are connected with individual universities—the Maritime School of Social Work being associated with several colleges in the Maritimes.

During the academic year 1948-49 there were in the seven schools of social work (the eighth being initiated only this summer) 637 regular students, of whom 472 were in full time from those of the University of Toronto and University of British Columbia with 139 and 127 students respectively at the Maritime School with 18 students.

During its nine years of existence, the Maritime School enrolled only sixty students, of whom forty-six received diplomas. All of the graduates were born in the Maritimes, and the majority of them remained in the field in the Maritimes, but a few have gone to other parts of the country, especially in view of the personnel needs in the field.

It is significant that those who have carried the burden of work through the years without benefit of professional training or of much assistance from professionally trained workers, are among the greatest promoters and supporters of professional schools of social work.

EVENING SESSION

"I come as a borrower in the main, but hope that, in the field of social services particularly, Newfoundland may some day make a contribution of human values and—that characteristic of the Maritimes—interest in the whole of Canada," said Dr. Pottle.

Miss Yeo and to all others who have helped to make our convention a success.

"Whereas the P.E.I.T.F. has accomplished much of benefit to our teachers.

"Be it resolved that we, assembled here, commend its executive for the splendid effort and urge them to continue their good work."

The nominating committee brought in the following report: President — Miss Betty King; Vice-President — Mr. Gordon Sawyer; Secretary — Miss Jean Rayner.

The convention closed with the singing of God Save the King.
