

To Produce Surgical Cleanliness

There is a new kind of cleanliness in the world today, one that cannot be secured by the use of soap and water. It means a cleanliness so perfect that all bacteria or germs are destroyed and the conditions for their growth removed. These conditions can be secured by use of harmless agents of which the leading one is or as usually called, "Peroxide". This is being largely used as a mouth wash, gargle, as an application to wounds to prevent infection and for any purpose where a cleansing germicidal application is needed. Bottles 25, 40 and 75 cents.

CHANGE OF BILL AT PEOPLE'S THEATRE

Capacity houses greeted the new management of the People's Theatre last evening, when an entire change of programme was presented consisting of six excellent photo-plays.

The headliner for the evening being Lubin's three-reel detective story, "Partners in Crime" featuring Bartley McCann, Edith Clayton and other well known Lubin stars—a story of two widowers who are high-class crooks, Jansen and Dobby, and their children, Frank Dobby and Esther Jansen, who are sweethearts, but ignorant of their father's occupations.

Frank, who is in a newspaper office, is assigned to run down a band of crooks, and joins forces with Andrews, a detective. Frank is caught by the band and on the point of being killed by a bomb, when rescued by Esther. Again they trail the band, and Dobby is sent to prison and Jansen's daughter that she can never marry the son of a thief. Dobby succeeds in escaping from prison, and in so doing is wounded.

Frank again agrees to assist Andrews in capturing the rest of the gang. Esther learns of this and promises to help the young people. Andrews plans to go down the river in a motor boat. Jansen learns of this and posts his men where they can kill the detective when he gets opposite their hiding-place, but Frank takes Andrews' place. Jansen finds out and swims the river to head him off, but is shot by the police, the rest of the gang is caught, and Frank, his work done, goes to the home of Esther to break the news of her father's death, and there finds his own father dying.

The three reels contained many sensational and thrilling acts, and held one's attention throughout.

The balance of the programme was made up of "The Road of Plandale," an excellent Biograph offering, "Caught in the Web," showing the full truth of circumstantial evidence, and a roving comedy, "The Star Boarder" featuring Chas. Chaplin, was the means of vociferous applause.

The above programme will be repeated this afternoon at the matinee at 3.15 and again to-night. Those wishing to see an all-round good programme should not fail to attend one of the shows to-day.

KING DECORATES CAPTAIN GRENFELL

LONDON, Feb. 25.—At Buckingham Palace today, the King received Capt. F. Grenfell, 9th Lancers and decorated him with the Victoria Cross. Captain Grenfell won the honor during the retreat from Mons, when he was wounded. Soon as he recovered he returned to the fighting line and was again wounded. He is now practically recovered from his second wound and hopes to return to the front.

WOUNDED NOW FILL NOTED RIVIERA HOTEL

PARIS, Feb. 20.—The Riviera is one great hospital from Cannes to Nice, from Nice to Beaulieu, and from Beaulieu to Monte Carlo and Cape Martin, and about one half the best hotels are converted into hospitals, convalescent homes and dispensaries. At Cannes the Carlton Hotel is the largest hospital, with 1,200 beds not yet quite filled; the Casino is the next largest, accommodating 300 wounded, while the Hotel Gallia is third, with 250 beds. The Beau Rivage is now being prepared by the English at Cannes for the reception of English officers and men.

The disorder and lack of ventilation in the French hospitals which I have seen (with three exceptions) is appalling, even where, as in the case of the Cannes Casino, with its floors of parquet or tiles and its high ceilings, proper sanitation would not only be possible but easy.

The Casino Municipal de Cannes is perhaps the most interesting of all the hospitals on the Riviera to visit, on account of the sad contrast of its present state to that of other and happier days. The vestibule is the Barbeau Reception. The great hall is filled with sixty eight beds containing the least seriously wounded; on the right in the Salle des Petits Chevaux et de La Boule are sixty beds with the more serious cases; the Salle de Baccarat facing South and flooded with sunshine, houses all the cases of rheumatism, pneumonia, bronchial colds, etc., while the restaurant on a level with the terraces and overlooking the blue Mediterranean, brings health and strength to the convalescent, who bask in the sunshine and amid the flowers of the famous gardens. The convalescents alone are allowed fresh air, the other rooms are kept hermetically sealed and the air is beyond the power of polite words to describe.

The Bar American with its red tiled floor and white ripolin walls, also facing South, is the Salle d'Operations and where former patients lined the shelves behind the bar itself are now rows of instruments, an autoclave and other sterilizing appliances. Across the corridor the cabinet de toilette makes an excellent barber shop, where the soldiers have the unglorious duty of shaving and a leading hairdresser, who is able to leave their beds.

On the second floor the small card rooms accommodate the non-commissioned officers, the Salon de Lecture has been converted into an excellent reading room, a sort of gymnasium, glorified Zander gymnasium, where electric baths, rowing machines and various other mechanical contrivances for artificial exercise strengthen wounded muscles and restore shattered nerves. These apparatus, donated already at first from the cold and only really interesting to the medical department of the hospital. The Direction and the Doctor-en-Chef occupy the small rooms on the second floor front, where formerly much money changed hands. It is fair to say that in spite of the bad air, the dirty linen and the general disorder, the wounded men seem happy and comfortable and that the three cases have been lost since the Casino was opened as a hospital in October.

SEES BIG CONTRAST.

In striking contrast to this lack of system and order is the hospital organized at the Hotel Gallia, where many English nurses are in charge and where large windows thrown open to balconies admit fresh air and sunlight and where the wounded recover with a rapidity that astounds the French doctors, who shrug their shoulders and explain with accents of mixed pelusage and aim: "Mon Dieu! Avec ce courant d'air les pauvres doivent s'en mourir." (Heavens in this draught the poor souls ought really to die.)

The food however, in nearly all the hospitals is excellent and not badly served, and champagne is given once a day to the convalescents who need mild alcoholic stimulants.

At Nice there is among others one small hospital, beautifully appointed and deficiently managed, the Princess Eugene Murat, where the ladies have given their services as well as their financial assistance.

At Monte Carlo there are numerous hospitals and at Cap Martin there is one, all of which are rapidly filling as the train bears numbers of wounded south. If the French brave fighters they are braver still in the way they bear their sufferings—patient, uncomplaining and grateful for the least kindness—and I have seen men with a leg or an arm amputated smilingly adjusting a wooden limb, and patiently strapping to use it "la France!" is all they say and feel.

BLACKS ARE POWERFUL.

At Cap Martin great interest centres about the Senegalese barracks, where the black soldiers, in their better looking than the South African negroes, are drilling under an able commandant preparatory to leaving in March or April for the front. Although childish in their simplicity, these big men show a surprising aptitude for drill and discipline, and it was most interesting to watch them go through their manoeuvres—rifle drill, marching, running, charging and most startling of all, their bayonet attacks, in which, rushing forward at great speed, in single files, they thrust their bayonets with great force into the receding chests of straw dummies, hung from a row of cypress trees which lined the barrack walls. These exercise over them we set to their lighter tasks of cleaning the horses, cooking the lunch, which is done over wood fires and their quarters, which are very clean and each man has his pallasse of straw to sleep on, a hook for his clothes and a rough lavatory to wash in, where large signs painted above the tubs warn them "not to drink the water while washing"—apparently a Senegalese custom not considered healthy in France! The only complaint of these huge, amiable creatures, is the cold, which they find intolerable even when the thermometer registers 50 to 60 degrees Fahrenheit.

How will they endure Northern France and Belgium in the bitter month of March? The horses, too, imported mostly from Tunis and Algeria, suffering already at first from the cold and later develop coats as warm and furry as a wolfhound's. The Senegalese have a great taste for Sweet Caporal cigarettes, and a present of 5,000 made them all supremely happy for an afternoon.

EELGIAN PRINCE HAPPY AT FRONT.

LONDON, Feb. 25.—The Daily Mirror says Prince Leopold, the fourteen-year-old son of King Albert of Belgium, is now at the front.

When Antwerp was bombarded the Royal youngster, with his brothers and sisters, was sent to England, and the children became the guests of Earl Curzon. Leopold constantly pestered his mother and mother to allow him to go back to Flanders, and now at last his entreaties have been granted. In the last few days he has visited a number of field ambulances and under the direction of King Albert has seen the trenches and been presented to the Belgian army.
