MCCORMACK'S JOAN CRAWFORD PICTURE TREAT AT THE CAPITOL

Hundreds Turned Away Last Night — "Song 'O My Heart" Well Worth Any-one's Time, So Don't Miss It.

If you want to give your ears and eyes the season's biggest treat, go to the Prince Edward Theatre as soon as possible and there you will find the long promised Fox movie-tone triumph, John McCormack's first stellar vehicle, "Song 'O My Heart."

Romantic intrigue amid royal environment, fierce revolutions, gay court functions, scintillating operatic debuts, glamorous receptions and fiery love episodes enliven the dramatic moments that motivate "Dream of Love," which opened yesterday at the Capitol Theatre.

Joan Crawford and Nils Asther appear in the leading roles in the gripping modernization of "Adrienne Lecouvreur," seventeenth century play in which Sarah Bernhardt starred for many seasons in Paris.

Dorothy Farnum, who adapted the French play for the screen, laid the plot in a Balkan kingdom where the colorful action takes place with swiftly moving episodes that revolve about the romance between a strolling gypsy dancer and the heir to the throne.

As the gypsy girl, Miss Crawford gives the outstanding performance of her career and follows her triumphant characterization in "Our Dancing Daughters," and with John Gilbert in "Four Walls," Asther is seen to great advantage as the Crown Prince and reaches new dramatic heights in the climax where he is ordered executed as a traitor.
