

What Doctors Think of the Laxative Habit

In all history, no Indian was ever known to have constipation. Nor need YOU. He chewed the bark of a tree called cascara. Today, we have the candy Cascaret.

Cascaring the bowels never forms a laxative habit. If already formed, an occasional Cascaret will usually break the habit. For cascara strengthens the muscular walls of the bowels, and their need of any aid at all grows constantly less. What other cathartic has this characteristic? The writer knows of none.

An evacuation brought gently about by cascara will, nine times in ten, be followed by full functioning of the bowels on the morrow—and for days after. For there is no REACTION as with sickening salts, or any of the man-made purgatives that go through one's system like a bullet.

Physicians tell us cascara is the ideal laxative—and the tongue tells us candy Cascarets are its ideal form. At least a million people know this; what a pity there are any who don't! Especially parents; because children love to take a Cascaret. After which, for days-on-end, the bowels will be seen to work of their own accord.

The only habit from cascara is that of regularity! Cascarets tone and train the bowels. But at the first sign of returning sluggishness another Cascaret is as effective as the first.

There isn't a druggist who hasn't Cascarets, so WHY experiment with laxatives?

Gear Grease that will not CONGEAL

It is congealed grease that makes gears so hard to change and your car so stiff to move in winter. Ease of driving and, what is just as important, economy of operation, demand a grease that won't congeal.

Any ordinary grease will stiffen the moment the temperature drops.

Whiz Sub-Zero Gear Grease

will flow freely in the coldest weather—even at 40° below zero.

You need WHIZ Sub-Zero Grease. In the coldest weather it will keep a protecting film on every gear and every bearing, preventing the damage that's sure to be done without it.

Drive in now where you see the sign illustrated here. Have the gear cases flushed out completely and the old grease replaced with WHIZ Sub-Zero Grease—don't mix WHIZ with other grease.

RIDDLES—OLD AND NEW

Riddles have been asked and answered for thousands of years. They were common among the ancient Greeks and Hebrews, and seem also to have been known to the Egyptians.

One ancient riddle is this: "What has first four legs, two legs, and three legs?" You have very likely heard the answer—a human being. A baby crawls on all-fours, then learns to walk on two legs. When a person grows old, he often makes use of a cane or crutch—giving him his third "leg."

In an old Russian folk-tale, a princess agrees to marry any man who asks her a riddle she cannot answer. The hero, named Boots, gives her this riddle:

"As I came to see you, I saw something that was bad, I struck the bad thing with what was bad, and from a bad thing the bad thing died—what were the bad things?" If you had been the princess, could you have answered that riddle? In the story we are told that she gave up. Boots gave her the answer, "The bad things were a snake and the lance with which I killed it."

I should not call that a very good riddle, but it seems to have been enough to win the princess.

I have prepared a leaflet called "Forty Good Riddles and Answers." Would you like a copy? Here are some of the riddles:

1. What fruit do electric light wires bear?
2. What key is a poisonous one?
3. Is a biscuit a soda cracker what is an ice pick?
4. When is a bee like a prisoner?
5. What flies when its wings are broken?

How many of those can you answer? I shall be glad to send the leaflet, which contains the answers, to any boy, girl or grown-up who mails me a stamped envelope, with name and address written on the outside. Address your letter to Uncle Ray, in care of this newspaper. Write carefully so that the leaflet may reach you safely.

Who Owns Anne's Heart

BRITISH UNITED PRESS. PARIS, Oct. 18.—To whom does the heart of beautiful Anne of Brittany belong? All France is asking this question to-day.

The struggle for her heart began four hundred years ago, when Anne, then a twenty-year-old duchess with only a handful of archers and lancers to support her, stood at the drawbridge of her fortress castle in Nantes and gazed scornfully at an ugly and ferocious-looking nobleman three or four times her age, who had come and announced brutally that he was going to marry her. "I will take you by force," cried Alain, sire of Albre, angrily shaking his fist at her across the moat. "You will have to take me by force or otherwise," replied the beautiful young Anne of Brittany calmly, and that was the beginning of a desperate struggle for her heart, and the province that was twenty-one. She saved Brittany but she died a broken-hearted woman.

In an effort to save her beloved country from being overrun and destroyed by the French, she married King Maximilian of Germany by proxy at the age of thirteen, and when that plan failed she married two French Kings before she was twenty-one. She was one of the most romantic and self-sacrificing tales in history.

When Anne died in 1514 she requested that her body be buried in France, but that her heart be sent to her native Brittany. It was placed in a golden casket, in the Nantes church where the strange marriage by proxy had taken place, but some years ago the City of Nantes handed it over to the museum of the Department of the Loire Inferieure for safe keeping.

That was a satisfactory arrangement until Nantes acquired its own museum. Now the city wants the heart back, but the Department of the Loire Inferieure regarded it as a gift instead of a loan, and refuses to return it. There have been many arguments and ruffled feelings and so the city has finally started an action to regain it. The local courts must decide shortly to whom the heart rightfully belongs.

Anne was scarcely twelve years old when she succeeded her father, Duke Francis II, as Duchess of Brittany, and on Sept. 9, 1488, she found herself faced by internal as well as external enemies.

The next year Charles VIII invaded Brittany in an attempt to annex both Anne and her duchy. But Maximilian had heard of her charm and prowess, and had sent couriers with an offer of marriage.

It meant an alliance with a strong power, and she grasped it although he was unable to come to his own wedding. On top of that she concluded a compact with Henry VII of England, and the frightened Charles went scurrying back to France.

As time passed Charles VIII became sceptical about Anne's marriage and alliance with Maximilian, and attacked Brittany again, burning and laying waste its fairest cities. He finally occupied the entire province and sent Anne an offer of marriage.

"But I am already the wife of Maximilian," answered Anne. "That marriage can be annulled," he retorted.

"Never!" declared Anne, continuing to hope that her husband would finally come to her assistance. "My marriage is my own affair."

As nothing would make her change her mind, Charles VIII appealed to the Pope of Rome to intervene.

"My heart is my own!" she cried in despair.

"Your heart is not your own," decreed the Pope. "It belongs to your country."

Finally realizing that it was the best thing for Brittany, Anne agreed to the annulment and married Charles, being crowned Queen of France at the age of fourteen. After the marriage he won her love, but crushed it again by his infidelities. They had four children but all died.

She was only twenty-one when Charles VIII died in 1498 and the following year she married his nephew and successor, Louis XII, believing that it would save Brittany from further strife. She was the only woman who was ever crowned Queen of France twice.

"My body I want buried in France," she wrote just before her death at Blois in 1514, "but my heart must be sent to my beloved Brittany."

And now, more than four centuries later, men are fighting over it as when it beat in the breast of one of the bravest women of all time.

COL. BOOTH IN WORKS SINCE YOUTH

(Canadian Press) TORONTO, Ont., Oct. 17.—Colonel Mary Booth, C. B. E., granddaughter of the later General William Booth, founder of the Salvation Army was literally thrown into rescue work in no less a oceany than a "Black Maria" for when she was three weeks old she rode in one through the streets of London, with her mother, Mrs. Branwell Booth, who was hurrying to Holloway Jail to help an unfortunate young girl who had been wrongfully arrested.

"In the Salvation Army no position is closed to a good woman," she said in an interview, in referring to the fact that her grand mother, wife of the founder of the Army, was one of the first women to speak from a pulpit. "That was a day when people thought it sheer madness to talk of the equality of men and women." A magnificent opportunity lay before the Salvation Army in Germany. Before the war it was necessary to secure a permit from the police to hold an Army meeting. Extensive work was being carried on by the Army, both in the prisons and in the slums.

"Before the war anything English was regarded with suspicion, and the Salvation Army, although international in spirit, was considered 'English,'" said Colonel Booth. "Consequently we had a bitter struggle, although we have been at work there for forty years. But since the war there has been a marked improvement. Hostels are springing up all over the country, and one of the finest hostels in Europe is the S. A. Hostel in Berlin. The Government recently showed their appreciation of our work by a grant of about $2,500 to me for religious work."

The popularity of the Salvation Army in Germany was evidenced by the setting apart of one day in Berlin for Army meetings. On this day, recognized as "Booth's Day," the theatres closed.

Modern Utopia

(By British United Press) LONDON, Oct. 18.—One might pass along the upland roads, criss-crossing the Cotswold Hills a dozen times without stumbling upon the straggling group of bungalows and picturesque wooden shacks which constitute the Whiteway Colony.

But if, by any chance, you should take the narrow turning "to Whiteway," which is indicated by a single finger sign-post, you will come at length upon a settlement unlike any other in Great Britain.

For the man and woman in the Whiteway Colony. Think the marriage service is of no importance; Do not recognise any social, political or civil conventions; And stoutly maintain and assert the right of each individual to complete personal liberty of thought, word and action, provided that in exercising that liberty they do not interfere with liberties of their fellow-men and women.

Mr. Gaspard Marin, secretary of the colony, is a man of dominating personality and bears a striking resemblance to Tolstoy. "We recognise no authority whatsoever," he said, "save that of our own conscience and we do not attach any importance to legal marriage."

"If a union is contemplated," he continued, "the couple sometimes make a public announcement, sometimes they do not. If after a time they feel they cannot live harmoniously together they separate. It is entirely their own affair, and so long as they recognise their moral obligations to the children, if any, no one interferes."

"Sometimes persons choose to be married legally. They are quite free to do so. But this ceremony is not regarded as binding by the Colonists. A little while ago a young man and woman were married but separated amicably after a short period. "Others, who have never married and who have children, are still living happily together. The women Colonists are charming, well-educated women, and, apparently, quite contented with their life."

Most of the Colonists are vegetarians, some from principle, others from necessity, but, as in religion and social matters it is left entirely to individual taste. Each Colonist is expected to do a fair share of work and to contribute towards the maintenance of the Communal funds, the hall, school, room, the swimming pool and the building of roads. The Colonists are people of many nationalities, who live with their

SAYS HARVESTERS HAD HARD TIME IN THE WEST

HUDDERSFIELD, Eng., Oct. 18.—Many of the British miner-harvesters were delighted with their lot in Canada, said J. H. Hudson, Labor member of the House of Commons for Huddersfield, in an address here on Saturday night recounting his experiences on a visit to the Dominion.

Some of the men, however, having been unemployed for four years, suffered after the initial start in Canada; their hands looking as if they had been crucified, Mr. Hudson said. At Winnipeg he had been thrown up their jobs, to return to work, but after seeing the state of the hands he could not find the heart to do so, he remarked.

The organized labor movement was described as "almost down and out" in Canada. Nevertheless the Liberals and Conservatives in various governments had brought great schemes of public enterprise into operation, he declared. If he had had any doubts about public-owned railways, for instance, they had been dispelled in Canada. He also paid tribute to the hydro-electric power development in the Dominion.

NOVEL FORM OF TAX RAISES LARGE SUM

QUEBEC CITY, Oct. 18.—Hospitals and charities here have received $300,000 during the past 12 months as the result of what is known as the "hospital" or "meat tax." The tax is simplicity itself, and has been designed to procure more money for charitable institutions. On each and every meal eaten in a restaurant or hotel in the province for which the check amounts to over one dollar, a tax of five per cent is added to the amount, and is paid by the customer before he leaves the restaurant or dining room.

The measure became effective on July 1, 1927, being passed by the provincial legislature during their session in the early months of 1927, and the collection is in the hands of the provincial secretary's department.

Government surveys have shown the land area of the Philippines to total 114,000 square miles, of which slightly more than 12 per cent is cultivated.

EVEREADY Layerbilt

There's been a revolution in the science of battery building—Eveready has found a way to give you more battery for your money than you ever bought before!

The new Layerbilt principle can be understood by anyone. It simply gives you more current-making elements by packing flat cells like crackers in a box, instead of using many round cells with waste space between.

You actually get the equivalent of a much bigger battery and, of course, it takes much longer to use it up. That's why you should buy Eveready Layerbilts and save money. Now selling at new low prices. Ask your dealer.
