Class B Title Won By Hickey

Earl Hickey, a new member of the Summerside Golf Club, defeated Lyman Abbott yesterday to win the Class B. club championship, over a 36-hole layout in a close, exciting playoff by the close margin of 3 and 2.

The match was most interesting and in doubt all the way. Mr. Hickey played sound, consistent golf. Mr. Abbott also played steadily.

It was an even performance with the lead see-sawing back and forth and at the end of the first 18 holes both competitors were even.

At the 27th hole mark, Lyman Abbott had a slight advantage of one up which Hickey overcame in the final stretch. Hickey concluded the match on the 34th green with a birdie to the opponent's par.

The game was refereed by Earl Stipson who said it was one of the closest games seen on the course. Many spectators watched the play with keen interest.

ENROUTE TO GENEVA

(By The Canadian Press)

QUEBEC, Aug. 29 — Expressing gratification over Canada's trade improvement this year, Revenue Minister J. L. Ilsley sailed in the liner Empress of Britain yesterday. He is en route to Geneva for the League of Nations assembly.

Ilsley said though the drought situation in the west and its effect on wheat production was distressing, the outlook generally was not as bad as expected two months ago.

REVIEWS

The capture of Quebec by Wolfe in 1759 saw the whole of Canada pass into the hands of the British. The expulsion of the Acadians in 1755 threw open a vast area of excellent farming land in the Provinces by the sea for English settlement.

"So much for the moment for Canada. The American Revolution saw the separation of the older English colonies from the British crown. Their declaration of independence was made on July 4th, 1776, and was accepted after the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown in 1782. From that moment the position of British loyalists in the new United States became untenable, and in their thousands they sought new homes under the old flag in the British dominions to the north, in Canada, and Nova Scotia, and in this island in which we live. Among those who came as United Empire Loyalists to Canada was the Reverend Charles Inglis who became the first Bishop in British dominions beyond the seas.

Life History Of First Bishop

"It is well that we should pause at this time to learn something of the life-story of this forefather of our Church, and of the circumstances which surrounded his coming. Charles Inglis was born at Glencolumbkille, County Donegal, Ireland, of Scottish parentage in 1734. His father was the Rector of that parish, and he himself was a son and grandson and great-grandson of the Rectory. Charles was but eleven ye[illegible] father died, and he ca[illegible] the tutorship of his elder brother who succeeded the father in his appointment. Charles seems not to have had a University education but to have progressed so well under his brother's guidance that he became not only master of English, but was able also to converse in Latin and to read from the other learned languages. In 1754 at the age of twenty we find him migrating to America to be a teacher in the Free School at Lancaster Pennsylvania. This work was under the auspices of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. Here he continued till the summer of 1758, teaching in the school, and rendering such assistance as he could to the clergymen in charge of the parish, and reading for himself with a view to offering as a candidate for the Christian Ministry.

"In 1758 he went back to England to be ordained. He carried excellent letters from those with whom he had been associated, declaring him to be 'A young gentleman of unblemished character, discreet in his behaviour, and free from any suspicion of anything unbecoming the son of a clergyman.' He was ordained by the Bishop of Rochester, Dr. Zachary Pearce, acting for the Bishop of London, in Fulham Palace Chapel on Sept. 24th, 1758. After further examination he was advanced to the priesthood in December of the same year, and licensed "to perform the ministerial office in the province of Pennsylvania in America." At the request of the S. P. G. he was appointed their minister in the mission of Dover, then in the province of Pennsylvania. He arrived back in Philadelphia on June 22nd, 1759 and entered upon his new duties on July 1st.

Magnitude Of Task

"His reports to the S. P. G. which are still in existence give some idea of the extent of the task to which the young missionary had put his hand. His parish extended some thirty miles along the Delaware River. There were three churches, ill-conditioned and out of repair, and he built a fourth, ministering to the population of a whole county and to many who came from over its borders. The neighbouring country he reports contains many hundreds of people who have never heard a sermon and are totally ignorant of the first principles of religion. Drunkenness and debauchery were very bad, and he campaigned very earnestly against them and with marked success. He interested himself also in missions to the Indians, and to the securing of relief for those inhabitants of the frontiers whose farmsteads suffered from the ravages of unfriendly natives. By 1762 his health had been so impaired by the unhealthiness of the district and the constancy of his labour we find him writing the S. P. G. that some change would be necessary. During these early years of his ministry he had been profoundly influenced by the preachings of the great evangelist George Whitefield, and in part because of this, there came just at this time a call to be the assistant to the Rector of Trinity Church, New York. The people of Dover objected strenuously to his removal, so that in spite of the fact that he had lost his young wife after only a few months of married life he consented to remain. But the people of the New York parish had set their minds on him for their minister and repeated the call with urgency which would not be refused and in 1765 he transferred to his new field. During six years at Dover he had baptized 756 children and 53 adults, and communicants had increased from 49 to 114.

"His ministry in Trinity Church, New York extended over 18 years, 12 as Assistant and six as Rector. These years were filled with every kind of service which an earnest Christian minister would find in such a field. His diaries and his S. P. G. reports reveal a keen interest in education, in the organization and extension of the Church's work in the colonies, in missions to the Indians. There is frequent reference in his reports to the need for the appointment of a Bishop or Bishops for the colonies. Thus far every candidate for the ministry from the colony had to journey to the Motherland for his ordination, and so fraught with danger was travel that one in every five was lost in the perils of the voyage. Confirmations there were none.

"Mr. Inglis's scholarship was recognized by an honorary degree of M. A. conferred by Kings College (now Columbia University). Two years later a like honor was conferred by Oxford, and still later the degree of Doctor in Divinity.

A Colorful Ministry

"Naturally enough a ministry in New York covering the years of the Revolution was coloured by its incidents. Dr. Inglis, and indeed all the clergy, were loyal Britishers and suffered in consequence many indignities and hardships. These took the form of interference with their religious services and sometimes attacks upon their person. Along with others he and his wife were included in a Bill of Attainder declaring them guilty of high treason. On one particular occasion his conduct so commended him for his British loyalty that the matter was brought to the attention of the King who sent him a congratulatory message and a gift of a handsomely bound Bible and Prayer Book.

"The termination of the war and the setting up of a new government left for him and a host of loyalists no choice but withdrawal. Their personal possessions were taken from them and they were deprived of their means of livelihood. Dr. Inglis resigned as Rector of Trinity Church and applied to be received on the clergy roll of Nova Scotia. In the same year 1783 his second wife and his eldest son were taken from him by death. With his remaining family he went to England sending his furniture and library to Nova Scotia in the care of a friend.

"In England he remained till 1787 labouring in the interests of the churches he had left and advising with those in authority in plans for the future. 1784 saw the consecration of Dr. Seabury as the first Bishop of the Church in the United States, the culmination of many years of effort and waiting in which Dr. Inglis had urgently shared. Like provision for the Church in Nova Scotia did not come so quickly. There was much opposition, some coming from members of other communions, and some rivalry in which Dr. Inglis was far from having a part. On August 9th, 1787 he received formal appointment as Bishop of Nova Scotia, and on August 12th in the same year he was consecrated by the Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by the Bishop of Rochester and Chester.

"Setting out as soon as possible thereafter for his new field of work he arrived in Halifax at midnight on Monday October 15th. He was most cordially received by Governor Parr and began at once the organization of his vast diocese which extended to Detroit in the west and included all the Maritime Provinces, Upper and Lower Canada, and the ancient colony of Newfoundland thrown in for good measure. Surely colossal was the diocese of the first Bishop of Nova Scotia.

"He decided to make Halifax his place of residence and constituted St. Paul's Church (the present St. Paul's Church, the oldest non-Roman place of worship in the Dominion) as his cathedral. In Halifax itself he found an awkward situation in the absentee Rectorship of Dr. Bryenton of St. Paul's who was living comfortably in England on a salary of £190 while his curate an exceedingly poor preacher, and otherwise deficient, received £19 for the performance of the perfunctory duties of his office. Early he summoned a gathering of his clergy, eleven out of thirteen being present. Having examined the credentials of all present he delivered his charge full of wise counsel and eager hope for the future of their work. He found the state of religion far from satisfactory in the new colony, and the calibre of the ministry indifferent enough.

First Diocesan Tour

"In July of 1788 he undertook his first diocesan tour, his record of which is to be read in his journals. Falmouth and Windsor and Horton and Cornwallis, Annapolis and Clementsport, points in his journeying, are familiar names to Nova Scotians. Crossing the Bay of Fundy he instituted the first Rector of Trinity Church St. John, and proceeded to Fredericton, visiting Kingston and Maugerville and Gagetown and other points whose names are familiar to every descendent of Loyalist forebears. Recrossing the Bay of Fundy he visited Digby and Weymouth, Granville and Newport encouraging the building of new churches, conducting confirmations and generally laying foundations for the Church's work.

"In May 1789 he set out on H. M. S. Dido for a visit to Quebec, reaching Charlotte Town en route on the 17th (Sunday) and was received by Governor Fanning. He had Mr. DesBrisay the Rector, of whom he speaks as "a decent sensible man" call his church-wardens and vestry together and expressed to them his astonishment at their neglect to have built a church. On the 22nd he was waited upon at the Governor's residence and presented with an address in which the matter of the lack of a building was lamented. In response the Bishop drew up a memorial to the Lieut-Governor in Council urging that the King's wishes about the provision of a church be complied with without delay.

"Proceeding on his journey to Quebec he found Church affairs there in a very unhappy state and was able by his tact, wisdom and courage to do much to put things on a better footing. He had much friendly intercourse with the leaders of the Roman Church, the needs o. Christian work in the vast wilderness finding them common ground. He continued his journeying as far west as Montreal and Lachine, before retracing his steps. This was the farthest west he ever reached in his great diocese.

The Three-Fold Task

"My duty today has seemed to be to give you something of the far past in the story of our Church in this part of this great Dominion. I turn now to speak briefly of the three-fold task which Bishop Charles Inglis saw as his in the organization of his work. 1st, and foremost there was the building up of the Church to its proper place and usefulness; 2nd. the erection of church buildings worthy to be regarded as places of divine worship; 3rd. an educational campaign, and the establishment of adequate means for procuring higher and secondary education, and especially the training of men for the sacred ministry. In all these directions Bishop Inglis was eminently successful. In a territory much larger than he could possibly administer he laid foundations upon which later generations have built, and today the Church in the Maritimes and farther owes much to the wisdom and courage of its first Bishop, who ever gave of his best for her advancement.

"I do not need to delay you longer this morning. The famous tablet to the memory of the great architect Sir Christopher Wren suggests for Bishop Chas Inglis a fitting epitaph—"If you would see my monument look around you." The Church in its life and work is the answer. If it has fallen in anything short of the hope of its founder the fault lies not with him.

The Future?

"And now what of the future? 150 years have seen many changes. Many of the problems are no longer the same. The teaching of salavtion and its enmity with sin does not change. The great gift of life which is eternal through Jesus Christ must ever be the burden of the Church's message. To that all her efforts at organization and equipment and education bend. Only so far as they ring true to the teachings of our Master as found in sacred Scripture can they succeed. If the Church in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island is to continue to serve her community her ministers need to be men pursuing a sacred calling; men of sound learning and indefatigable courage, speaking the truth and speaking it ever. If this Church is to live her lay people too need to be men and women of loyalty and courage, loving God and loving their Church, ready to spend themselves and their substance for her life. If this Church is to live then her children, the boys and girls of today, must be nurtured in the fear and admonition of the Lord, and made to know that for them their Church has a task for which they must be prepared, and which falls to them to do. Above all else they, before all people, must be led to know Jesus Christ as the world's Saviour and theirs—unfailingly theirs—and because theirs providing the foundation upon which their manhood and womanhood is to be built, their life to its very end is to be lived. Such it seems to me are some of the thoughts which are naturally ours on this day of anniversary. So let us seek to live and work and worship that we too shall be remembered as those who served.

ARE YOU LIKE THIS YOUNG MAN?

A few years ago he determined to solve the problem of uncertainty of future income by saving $5 every week.

He stuck to his resolution for a few months and then, being human, he let the weeks and months slip by without saving anything.

No one reminded him of his failure to save. Of course not. That was his own personal business. He saved $100; then was tempted to spend it, and did so. Now after two years of hit-or-miss methods he has found with the Imperial Life a savings plan that works.

An Imperial Life policy will help you stick to your resolution to build up a savings fund that will care for your dependents should you die, and provide a regular income for yourself after you retire.

Four men out of five who resolve to save by other means don't do it—can't do it. But four men out of five who save through the Imperial Life do keep up their regular deposits.

"FINANCIAL SECURITY THROUGH LIFE INSURANCE," by Paul Speicher, an international authority, is an interesting book which should be read by everyone who plans to provide financial security for himself and family. Your local Imperial Life representative will make a copy available to you without cost.
