Two Romances Feature Story Of Newsy Film

Two surging love stories live in Paramount's "Golden Harvest," produced by Charles R. Rogers, which opened yesterday at the Prince Edward Theatre.

These romances between Richard Arlen and Julie Haydon, and Chester Morris and Genevieve Tobin, have as their background the hysterical activity in the Chicago Wheat Pit and the turbulent farm strike and revolt against foreclosures that are right in the news today.

In this thrilling story by Nina Wilcox Putnam, Arlen and Morris, brothers born to the soil, have different ambitions. Morris leaves for the city for a career as a speculator, falls in love with Genevieve Tobin, daughter of a wealthy trader.

Arlen remains on the farm, marries Julie Haydon. As the price of wheat falls under the onslaughts of his brother, he organizes the farm strike, leads the revolt.

When Arlen sees a way of saving the farmers by stopping the shipment of food to cities, jacking prices, he enlists the aid of Morris. They combine, the market soars, and the picture drives on to a rousing peak.

The performances of the cast are outstanding. Rosco Ates and Elizabeth Patterson supply the comedy interest. The farm scenery, filmed on a location trip to Pendleton, Oregon, is beautiful. Ralph Murphy directed.

TO BAN THE SABRE

WASHINGTON, April 26—Clanking sabres, one of the last vestiges of old style warfare, are to become museum pieces. The United States war department issued orders today that "based on improbability of their use in the future, the cavalry has been ordered to store its sabres." Development of modern firearms and trench warfare has brought use of the long blades to a

Ken MAYNARD in THE WHEELS OF DESTINY

Ken Maynard And Serial At Capitol

Epic in quality, "Wheels of Destiny," Ken Maynard's latest starring production for Universal which opened last night at the Capitol Theatre, may be classed far above the usual "run of the mill westerns."

Heroic struggle, the fight of pioneers across the vast plains to California, the thirst for gold, and the terrific battles waged against thieves, treachery and the elements all go to lift it out of the "horse opera" rut.

Maynard, giving a splendid performance, is helped by capable direction, and is surrounded by a splendid cast, including the beautiful Dorothy Dix, Philo McCullough, Frank Rice, Jay Wiltsie, Ed Coxen, and Fred Sale, Jr.

Tarzan comes into his share of applause for his work in untying Maynard, lashed to a tree, and for his rescue of young Sale from a raging torrent. And right here, this reviewer picks a splendid future for 3-year-old Sale, who is one of the hits of the production.

The story concerns gold rush days. Jay Wiltsie, Maynard's partner, has a map showing the location of hidden gold. McCullough and his gang step in to get the map. They attack the hotel in the small mild-western town where the map is concealed and Ken rides in to save Bill's family and drive off the thieves.

I., erected by Captain Joseph Beers, about 1786, and in which he entertained the fifth Earl of Selkirk, who came to Prince Edward Island in 1804, and founded a colony. A descendant of Captain Beers, Miss Viola Beers, is chairman of the Maritime Interests committee of the club. Another slide that brought applause showed The Bluenose, made from a picture presented to the president of the club by Capt. Angus Walters.

Says Singer Millionaire Gave Wealth To Servants

LONDON, April 25.—Representatives of the surrogate court of New York, sitting behind locked doors of a room in Bush, House, Aldwych, taking evidence on commission, heard extraordinary stories on which depend the fate of the £2,500,000 fortune of the Singer millionairess, Mrs. Florence Adelaide Pratt.

The evidence of some of the witnesses was to the effect that Mrs. Pratt hired assassins to attack Major Stanley Williams, who was found stabbed outside his hotel at St. Juan les Pins on December 14, 1925, but subsequently recovered from his wounds: made six wills in eight years, leaving £1,000,000 to a chauffeur; £1,000,000 to a retired detective who was her personal bodyguard; £750,000 to a Paris dressmaker; and £250,000 to a corsetiere, the wife of a famous chief; treated he servants as equals and made presents of thousands of pounds, and although aged, lived in the delusion that she remained eternally young and beautiful.

Mrs Pratt died at the Ritz Hotel, London, in October, 1932. The Mysteries of her life and the intricacies of her wills are not yet solved.

BATTLE OF COURTS

Every known plea to contest the will has been made. The lengal battle will be fought in New York private court this month.

Mrs Margaret Alexander of Grosvenor Square, London, herself a Singer millionoiress, has consented to contest the validity of the last will of her sister, Mrs. Pratt.

The last of Mrs. Pratt's wills was made in London on August 21, 1931. Mrs. Alexander seeks to have this will declared void and to establish a will of 1925, under which the principal beneficiaries are relatives now living in England.

It is alleged that in 1931 Mrs. Pratt was mentally incompetent. The Guaranty Trust Company of New York, executors of the estate reply that Mrs. Pratt was a most brilliant woman, and that she was able and active until the time of her death.

A number of relatives from England and others, including the chauffeur, the detective, the dressmaker, and the corsetiers, who were astonished to hear that they figured in the will for vast sums, are expected to attend the hearing of the suit in New York.

Princess Fought At Front Decorated For Bravery

MOSCOW, April 26—How she came a member of the 4th Squadron of Tartars of the 2nd Brigade of the Division Sauvage du Caucasse. "I shaved by head, and, as my voice is naturally deep and my hands very masculine, nobody ever suspected that I was a woman."

Kept away from the trenches by her friend, the colonel, she at last protested that her companions would consider her a weakling, afraid of the firing line, and she at last obtained consent to spend a week in the trenches.

"It was a mistake," continued the princess, "and I was sorry from the moment I arrived. The trenches are no place for a woman during the war. She can much better serve her country as a nurse or with an ambulance unit, which is as dangerous, being often under fire."

Princess Katherine was decorated for bravery, after bringing 50 ambulances to safety after they had been lost for four days during heavy firing.

"I don't believe anything would kill me," she declared. "The closest I ever came to death was when a bullet grazed my forehead and shaved a straight path over the middle of my head like a parting. Another bullet passed through the cuff of my coat without touching the wrist."

In her memoirs, which are to be published soon under the title of "Princess in Uniform," the princess, who in private life is the Baroness Ikkul, tells how various girls fell in love with her when she was disguised as a soldier.

One Russian actress, who broke off a good engagement to follow the "Prince Djamal," had to be let into the secret before she would go away.

Farm and Fishing To Aid Newfoundland

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., April 26.—(C. P.) — The vision of a new race of Newfoundlanders, a breed of farmer-fishermen wresting a living from the soil and from the sea, has been replaced before Newfoundland's seafaring people by Hon. Thomas Lodge, member of the governing commission now in control of the island's affairs.

The conception that the country's future is indissolubly bound up with the codfishery is wrong, the Commissioner holds. He says the sea has been a poor provider, will continue to be a poor provider. And in his view it is about time the Newfoundlander was turning his eyes inland.

The ideal occupation, he told the Methodist College Literary Institute, would be a combination of fishing and farming in equal proportions. Fishing would occupy half the year, and in the other six months the fishermen could supplement his livelihood ashore.

The problem of turning the Newfoundlander towards the land would be a difficult one, the Commissioner admitted. There would be financial difficulties. Even greater, perhaps, would be the psychological problem. For the Newfoundlander has been imbued through the centuries with the idea that the sea is means of life.

Time For Change

But the time has come now for the change, Hon. Mr. Lodge declared. "In the last few years", he said, "the codfishery has only been carried on because the men engaged in it and their families have accepted far too low a standing of living." It was a standard, he said, "far below that which any community forming part of the British Empire can reasonably be expected to accept with patience inevitably." He say no hope of permanent improvement in the codfishery, but rather a relative lowering of the demand from year to year "as the standard of living in the world as a whole rises." For, he said, the "codfish is rather a poor article of food in the scale of absolute values."

"It is," he said, "an article mainly consumed by Latin countries with a relatively poor standard of living, and I should have thought that it is obvious that as the standard of living in the world rises, the relative, if not the absolute, demand for codfish must fall."

The Commissioner said he had agreed with other members of the government that every step possible should be taken to assist the maximum number of fishermen to prosecute the fishery this year. But this step had been decided upon because of necessity of dealing with an "immediate situation." It would foster a "spirit of selfhelp and independence" and help remove the "devastating moral effects of involuntary idleness."

He did not disclose the government's immediate plans in this respect. He assured his bearers, however that "stimuli" would be applied, though he added he was not sure in his own mind that their results would not be negative insofar as profitable cash returns were concerned.

But the real solution, he asserted, lay in the exploitation of the country's agricultural possibilities. He quoted figures to substantiate his contention. The estimated 160,000 persons dependent upon the fisheries, directly or indirectly, had produced about $8,000,000 worth of fish.

By comparison, not more than 30,000 persons had produced $5,500,000 worth of agricultural products.

"Is it not indicated," he asked, "that the most hopeful field in which to apply special stimuli is here, rather than in an industry in which 160,000 souls produce at the most $8,000,000 from which we know perfectly well a great deal has to be deducted to arrive at anything like an accurate estimate of the net advantage to the fishermen?"

"I suggest to you, very tentatively", he asserted, "that it is in the direction of the increased cultivation of the land that we must turn in order to find the solution of our immediate difficulties in the island."

New South Wales

HOME BUILDING UNDER GOVERNMENT AUSPICES

The State Government is encouraging home building by supplementing an advance prospective owners can obtain of 75 per cent. of the value of the security, repayable in 30 years. That advance is obtainable from the Rural Bank (a Government institution). The Government advances a further 10 per cent. repayable in 10 years. Interest charges in both cases will not exceed 5 per cent. The advances are limited to homes of a value of £1,000, in regard to which the home owner has to provide 15 per cent. either in land or in cash. This will enable a man to build his home of a value of £1000 (in which he finds £150), so that his weekly repayments will not exceed £1/3/6. Costs of material and construction are at present low, and the scheme is an important contribution towards industrial revival. There has been a general revival in the building trade since the dark days of 1931, and further stimulation is now expected to give additional results in respect to re-employment of men.

FACTORY WORK INCREASING

Statistics made available by the State Statistical Bureau in regard to the factories of New South Wales show that during the year ending June, 1933, work was found for 10,536 more employees, a striking contrast with the decline of 52,890 recorded between 1929 and 1932. The total of wages and salaries paid was more than £1,000,000 extra for the year. The total value of the finished goods produced and work done in the 7444 factories of the State was £124,445,767, the value of the materials used being £70,064,956 and of fuel consumed, £4,791,381.

(The returns relate to factories workshops and mills, in which four or more persons are employed or where power is used).

AUSTRALIA'S CHILLED MEAT TRADE

Development of the export of chilled meat from Australia to Britain is proceeding. The first vessel built to meet the stringent conditions arrived at Sydney during the month, the Commonwealth and Dominion Line's now motor vessel, Port Chalmers. She was on her maiden voyage, and contains the latest equipment and accommodation for handling and carrying refrigerated and general cargo. Special holds are provided for the transport of chilled and frozen meat. Temperatures in every part of the chilling chambers, gas concentration, and air circulation have elaborate systems of controls, which entirely satisfied the officers on the voyage out, when they were tested under working conditions.

The factor of supplies of meat that will comply with the conditions in chilled meat carrying is one largely for the growers, who are organizing their forces for setting up regular shipments. The change from frozen export to chilled, calls for a new line of operation on the part of the graziers and killing companies.

NEW ZEALAND TO AUSTRALIA FLYING

Mr. C. T. P. Ulm, a former colleague of Sir Charles Kingsford Smith, brought the first official air mail to Australia from New Zealand on February 18. The distance across the Tasman Sea from Auckland is 1260 miles, with no landing place anywhere between the two coasts. Consequently flying is practically still in its adventuring stages so far as that route is concerned. Mr. Ulm landed in Sydney 14 hours and 10 minutes after he left a beach near Auckland. His mail consisted of about 44,000 letters and packets, weighing, in all, nearly 6600 lbs. Mr. Ulm believes that a regular service will be possible in the near future when the right type of machine is available.

AMERICAN PLEASURE CRUISES TO AUSTRALIA

Sydney is becoming a favorite port of call for ocean cruises by large steamers. The Lurline, which was in port for a few days during the month, began her cruise at San Francisco and visited Hawaii, Samoa, Fiji and New Zealand en route to Sydney. Seventy per cent. of the tourists were women. The company's representative said the cruise was the first of an intensive campaign, which was to be continued during the year. In every port curios, works of art, sets of native weapons and similar purchases were stacked in the holds. More than 400 passengers were on board. The steamer sailed from Sydney for Port Moresby, Papua.

One of the organized "sights" in Sydney is a view of city and harbor from the pylon of the steel single arch bridge across the harbor. The visitors from the Lurline agreed that they had not seen anything more enchanting during their tour.

MONSTER OF LOCH NESS AN OLD KILLER WHALE IS OPINION OF SAVANT

LONDON, APRIL 26— A new theory that the Loch Ness "monster" is a marooned whale was advanced today by Fraser Brunner, curator of the British Sea Anglers. Brunner's theory was based on the study of a photograph of the monster taken recently by Dr. R. K. Wilson, London surgeon.

In an interview with the Daily Mail, Brunner said he believed the photograph showed not the head and neck of a strange animal but the dorsal fin of an old male killer whale. He pointed out the dorsal fin of the killer whale is long and slender, and said there are many animals with fins in the middle of their backs.

WASHINGTON, April 26—Senator David Schall (Republican, Minnesota) in a statement today said the United State's President's wife was charging five times what others charge for furniture similar to that produced in her factory at Hyde Park, N. Y.

"Mrs. Roosevelt's factory at Hyde Park produces furniture with her name autographed on it," he said. "The prices as quoted are five times the charge made for similar furniture produced by other factories and from this we must assume her autograph as the wife of the President of the United States makes the difference."

CLIFFORD'S INN TO BE WRECKED

LONDON, April 26—(C. P.): Historic centuries old buildings of Clifford's Inn, near the corner of Fetter Lane and Fleet Street are to be demolished this summer to make room for modern development.

Law students used Clifford's Inn in 1344. Judges sat in the hall to settle boundary disputes which arose after the Great Fire of London.

Buildings to be erected on the site will supply a want in the neighborhood, the owners say. Part of the property belongs to the Office of Works.
