William Burleigh ...ds Oyster Growers

Mr. William Burleigh, Ellerslie, has elected president of the Prince Edward Island Oyster Growers Association at the annual meeting of that body held in the Summerside Town Hall on Saturday evening. Other officers elected are as follows: Vice President, Brenton Clarke, Summerside; Secretary, H. E. Ellis, Summerside; Directors, J.R. Gillis, Miscouche; Major H.E. Inman, Summerside; J.G. McLean, South West. Mr. Aldred England, the retiring president was in the chair.

Many matters of interest to the oysters growers were discussed. Two resolutions were passed with reference to shucked oysters. One asked the Department of Fisheries to have an embargo placed on the importation of shucked oysters from the United States up to December 1st of each year and the second asked the department to equip a shucking plant in this province. It was explained that this would give considerable employment and also that many oysters not marketable in their shell because of their shape or appearance yet with good meat in them when shucked be suitable for shipping.

Another resolution asked that all Fisheries Guardians be placed under civil service. The starfish bounty was discussed and the Fisheries department will be asked to put it into effect on May 1st of each year.

Inspector L.J. Murphy, Conway, read a report on an inspection made in Montreal last season of oysters shipped from the Maritimes.

Dr. James Kerswell of the Biological Station at Bideford was present and took part in the discussions.—S

THE KIRK PULPIT

Preaching yesterday morning on the text "The peace of God, which passeth all understanding" (Philippians 4:7), the minister, the Rev. T.H. Bussell Somers, said: The human need for tranquillity has always inhered in life but in days like these it is accentuated. An Englishman is reported to have said that on three trips to this continent, he came to three different conclusions as to what was the major passion of North Americans. After one visit he concluded that this passion was power, after another he decided it was wealth, after the third he was sure it was acceleration. Well, acceleration is a towering fact among us. Speed becomes a mania and the pace is sometimes frantic, and in the midst of it one who cares about man's happiness and quality looks on the wreckage of that inner grace without which there can be nothing great in life or art, serenity. In view of the prevalent unhappiness because of this, some of our modern sophisticates might well cease their attacks on our forefathers because they were dour, grim, and unhappy. Sometimes they doubtless were. Their theology at times was dreadful. But, while they may have been dour, grim and unhappy, they were not cynical, flippant, futile, and unhappy. The more one deals with first-hand evidence, the more one is inclined to stake those of a former day against many of our modern sophisticates in point of happiness.

A new biography of Louisa Alcott, author of Little Women gives us the impression that in her generation life was not so steady and calm or so dour and grim as we have pictured it. At any rate, in the first twenty-eight years of Louisa's life, her family moved twenty-nine times, which is a record even for New York. Life then was not calm and easy. In the Alcott household, it was very difficult. But one gets the impression also that it was happy, fundamentally happy; serenity in the soul, serenity in the home, something profound and peaceful in themselves and in their relationships with one another and with God—a haven to come back to from the storms of life. We moderns desperately need that and a vital Christianity gives it. For whatever else a real religion has done or left undone, it has ministered to those who understood it best a profound resource of inner power, a margin of reserve around their need, so that even in a prison Paul could sing about the "peace of God, which passeth all understanding." He had within himself a serene spirit to come home to. Without that, nothing in the world can give abiding happiness.

Islanders Expected On H.M.C.S. Puncher Today

Formal Surrender—

marks on paper which ended the bloody Pacific conflict.

The Japanese delegation faced a table upon which lay two large copies of the articles of surrender, the Allies' copy bound in green, the Japanese bound in black—symbolic of the mournful day for Japan.

There was rigid formality throughout. The Japanese stood aloof with no show of emotion during the proceedings. They had been the last to board the battleship.

With the foreign ministers were Gen. Yoshijiro Umezu, who signed as chief of the imperial staff, and nine other Japanese.

Assembled Earlier

The signatories of the Allied nations had assembled earlier in the cabin of Admiral Halsey and filed out in order of their rank, led by Admiral Nimitz who signed for the United States.

Gen. MacArthur strode to a small table covered with green felt placed on the starboard side of the great No. 2 turret of three 16-inch guns pointed toward the overcast skies.

Silence fell over the crowd of dignitaries as MacArthur at 8.58 a.m. (7.58 p.m. E.D.T. Saturday) began with dramatic emphasis:

"We are gathered here, representatives of the major warring powers, to conclude a solemn agreement—"

On behalf of Emperor Hirohito, Foreign Minister Mamoru Shigemitsu signed first for Japan. He dofffed his top hat and firmly affixed his signature to the surrender document, a paper about 12 by 18 inches.

Shigemitsu carefully signed the American copy first, then affixed his name to a duplicate copy to be retained by Japan.

Following him, Gen Yoshijiro Umezu, of the Japanese imperial general staff, scrawled his name on the documents as in a tremendous hurry.

A Japanese colonel present was seen to wipe tears from his eyes as the general signed. All the Japanese looked tense and weary.

Gen. MacArthur was next to sign, as supreme Allied commander, on behalf of all the victorious Allied powers.

Gen. MacArthur immediately called for Lt.-Gen. Arthur Percival, British commander forced to surrender to the Japanese at Singapore in February, 1942, and Lt.-Gen. Jonathan Wainwright, the American forced to give up to the Japs at Corregidor in May, 1942, to step forward.

They were followed by Admiral Nimitz, who signed on behalf of the United States.

The United Kingdom's signature by Admiral Sir Bruce Fraser, British Pacific Fleet commander, was followed by that of Soviet Russia.

Quickly in turn, Australian, Canadian (Col. Moore Cosgrove, military attache at Canberra) French, Dutch and New Zealand representatives signed in that order.

The flags of the United States, Britain, Russia, and China fluttered from the verandah deck of the Missouri. More than 100 high-ranking military and naval officers of the Allies were in the colorfully-uniformed group watching the ceremony.

Following are the Prince Edward Island service men expected to reach Canada today aboard H.M.C.S. Puncher:

(In releasing the names of those expected aboard the vessel military authorities emphasized there may be additions or deletions to the list as it was compiled some time prior to the sailing of the ship).

Puncher originally was slated to dock at Quebec, but because her passengers were all from M.D. 6 she was re-routed and sent to Halifax. She is due to dock at 8 this morning.
