Hitler Says Germany Will Win If . . .

LONDON, Oct. 8 — (CP) — Adolf Hitler, attempting to bolster morale on the German home front, assembled Nazi party chiefs and military and home front leaders at his headquarters Thursday and told them the German people must not be discouraged by reverses, the Berlin Radio disclosed tonight.

Hitler mentioned the possibility of defeat, and the theme of his talk seemed to be: "Germany will win, if . . ."

"The Nazi party's struggle for power set an example for today's struggle of destiny of the German people," Hitler said. "The party never allowed itself to be discouraged by setbacks."

"Arms alone mean nothing," he said, "if not backed up by the will of men."

"The Nazi party's firm determination and utmost preparedness to help" are inspiring the people today, Hitler was quoted as saying, "especially under the hard conditions of the air war."

"The Fuehrer then continued," said Berlin's official broadcast, "that if the German people keep up this spirit, which has stood the test on the battlefields as well as at home, the war can never be lost and must and will bring a great German victory."

Hitler was quoted directly as having concluded his address in this way: "Take along with you in your hearts the unshakable belief that if our determination does not

Productive Operations At Near Peak

OTTAWA, Oct. 7—(CP)—Some evidence of "tapering off" in productive operations has been shown in Canada during recent months but there has been continued extension of the advance experienced since the war began and "new highlights" in Canada's industrial history were recorded from Jan. 1 to Aug. 31, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics said today.

"Fundamental factors indicating the trend of economic conditions averaged higher in the first eight months of 1943 than in the same period of the preceding year," the Bureau reported.

The index of the physical volume of business—based on five main components indicating the movement of production and distribution of commodities, showed a gain of 17.8 per cent, averaged by two years compared with 1942. A slight advance in the index of manufacturing production was even greater dimensions," said the Bureau. "The standing in the first eight months of the present year was 23.5 per cent against 23.8, a gain of 23.5 per cent."

The advance in mineral production was about 24 per cent the Bureau said, but the output of the mint and coal production showed declines.

The construction industry was less successful in obtaining new business during the first eight months of this year. Total of contracts awarded was $142,000,000 against nearly $190,000,000 in the same period of 1942. Building permits also showed a "marked decline."

Railway traffic was in greater volume during the first seven months of 1943. Tons of railway freight carried one mile by the major railways amounted to 31,000,000,000 tons against 28,900,000,000 tons in 1942. A slight gain was shown in number of cars loaded.

Internal trade showed further advance in 1943 over the high levels of 1942. The index of wholesale and retail sales recorded gains of 13 per cent and 5 per cent respectively.

External trade reflected the heavy production and flow of munitions and war supplies to the widespread battlefields. Export trade rose from $1,469,000,000 to $1,890,000,000, a gain of more than 27 per cent. The active balance of trade rose from $371,000,000 to $750,000,000.

"Due to the scarcity of additional manpower the number of persons employed in productive enterprise showed a relatively moderate gain in the first eight months of the present year over the same period of 1942," the Bureau of Statistics said.

"The general index of employment rose from 169 to 182 a gain of 7.5 per cent. The gain in manufacturing plants was of greater proportions, the index rising from 200 to 223.8.

A gain was shown in the working forces employed in construction, logging, mining and trade were at a lower level."

All That Glitters

By Frances Parkinson Keyes

"Giles, you're welcome to Isabel, and help her, but I'm sorry I ever bothered to try to help you get rid of her. It was my mistake, that she lifted the letter out of my pocket. You haven't made a mistake, Zoe, I don't want Isabel. I do want you, I need you. But I can't be cruel to Isabel on this account. Zoe rose, as if indicating that there was nothing more to say on the subject. When she picked up a letter, she said, 'I don't believe this cable will be much of a disappointment to you. I was afraid it might be. Bob didn't answer according to either formula. He says: 'All burnt up by your letter. Writing. Don't stage your girl scout act until you hear from me.'"

Zoe read the paper and laid it back on the table. "Of course I'll have to wait for his letter," she said. "So we're not going to be engaged at the moment. Giles, you'll have a whole week, before Bob's letter gets here, to break things gently to Isabel, or to decide you don't want to break anything to her. I'd rather not see you again, alone, until we have something definite to say to each other."

She missed him, during the next week, more than she was willing to admit; but she declined to compromise with the conditions she herself had made, even when Giles called her up the next morning and told her that he thought it might be a good idea if she and Helen would come down to Deauville for the weekend too. They had other plans already, Zoe said firmly.

According to Zoe's reckoning, Thursday was the first day that she could possibly hope to hear from Bob. The first mail came early in the morning and she had brought in her letters with her flaky crescents and her big bowl of coffee. The one that Zoe was waiting for lay on top. The text rushed out at her as she read it.

Dear Zoe—

Your letter just came in, and I've cabled you as you asked. But done it, I couldn't word the old thing either of the ways you suggested. Of course I know who the guy is you want to help out. I know you're a right to do just as you please and that you probably will. But since you've asked me how I'd feel about it, I may as well tell you that it would hurt me no end as if when a girl has got to save a guy from another dame he really isn't worth the trouble no matter how big a shot he seems to be.

Zoe, I know just how badly I must stack up beside Giles Arnold. If you decide in favor of him I won't be more to say except that I hope you'll be happier than I'll ever be again. But don't kid yourself along with any kind of an unofficial engagement. Come clean about it. That's the sort of girl you are. That's the sort of girl I love. You know how much. That is I hope you do.

Yours and then some,

IN MEMORIAM

MR. LYMAN BERNARD MCGOVERN

The community of Ellerslie was shocked to learn on the morning of Sept. 22nd, of the sudden passing of Lyman Bernard McGovern who had been in his usual good health up to the day before his death. Mr. McGovern has been a highly respected resident of Ellerslie for the past 21 years, where he operated a small farm and fox ranch. He was born on Oct. 6, 1876, in the village of Waterville, Quebec, being the eldest child of James and Dora Cotton McGovern. He attended the schools and lived in Waterville until he reached his manhood when he moved to Boston where he lived till the summer of 1916. The sympathy of all goes to Mrs. McGovern in her sudden bereavement.—S

SOCIAL GATHERING—On Wednesday, Sept. 22nd, a delightful social function was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wood Mt. Herbert, when a large number of friends tendered a post nuptial presentation to Mr. Sterling Wood and his bride (nee Miss Beryl Howe). After Mr. Elton Rayner had made a few introductory remarks, Laura Doreen Wood presented the bride with a beautiful bouquet of mixed flowers. Mr. Winston Wood then came forward and read an address of good wishes and Miss Mary Ferguson made the presentation of a gift of money. Sterling on behalf of his bride and himself thanked all for their kindness. After the singing of "For They are Jolly Good Fellows" a delicious lunch was served, and the remainder of the evening was spent in dancing and social intercourse.

WEAPON OF WAR

Symbol of the art of tailoring, the sewing needle stands for a Canadian industry that has done and is continuing to do its appointed task—producing thousands upon thousands of superbly-made, good-fitting uniforms for every branch of the Armed Forces of Canada. Uniforms such as these are war weapons, for they contribute comfort, well-being, smartness and service to every activity of our fighting men.

With a backlog of over three decades' experience, Tip Top Tailors has shared in this gigantic job. Today, the greater part of our production is devoted to war purposes. Civilian clothing comes next—to the extent of our remaining time and facilities.

This is the reason why you may have to wait for delivery of your civilian Tip Top clothing, a little longer than usual. Naturally there is no question of who comes first—you know and we know that the fighting men of our fighting forces must have "first serve"—and they are getting it, together with our grateful acknowledgment of the job they are doing.

CHAPTER XI

When Zoe went into her room Helen was still fast asleep, but presently she stirred, nestling with a childlike motion that made her seem like a little girl. Then she rubbed her eyes and sat up, staring at Zoe. When she finally recognized her, she threw her arms around her friend's neck and gave her a bear hug. "Zoe, darling!" she exclaimed fondly. "I'm so glad to see you. I was dreaming about you. I'm not sure yet where the dream left off and the real you began."

"That's not as unusual a situation as you'd suppose," Zoe answered. She tried not to speak satirically, and she did not free herself from Helen's embrace until she had hugged her in return. "Suppose we have our coffee together in here. Then we can make plans. Here's your mail."

"Oh, there's a letter from Deauville! Isabel must be feeling better. She told me she wouldn't try to write until she was."

Helen broke the seal unsuspectingly from between his folds. Zoe could see that this was a check before Helen even noticed that it was there. Leonie came in with the tray, and set it down on a small table near the bedside. Zoe poured out a cup of coffee and broke off a segment of present. Helen looked up at her with troubled eyes. "I've had the strangest letter from Isabel," she said in a bewildered voice. "She doesn't want me to spend the summer with her after all. She says that she's had a bad breakdown, that she has to spend the summer very quietly at the seashore. She's looking for a little villa, at Deauville or somewhere else near there, on the coast."

As soon as she finds one she's going to leave the hotel and move in. She says she couldn't possibly expect me to be contented, living in a secluded uneventful way like that. She says she knows you'll take the best possible care of me and of course we'll go home together, though she doesn't know just when. And she says that I'm to be her guest for the summer just as if we were spending it together. She says she's enclosing a check."

Helen dropped the letter and began to scan the counterpane and shake the bed-clothes in search of the missing bit of paper. Zoe picked it up and handed it to her. "It's for a thousand dollars," Helen said in an awed voice. "Why, Zoe, a thousand dollars would last forever and ever, wouldn't it?"

"Not at the rate Isabel Windsor spends money," Zoe answered. "But, then Zoe lit a cigarette and began to plan out loud."
