AUSTRALIA'S LARGE ORDERS FOR WOOD FROM CANADA.

Mr. G. W. Hudson, of the firm of G. Hudson & Son, timber merchants and lumbermen on a large scale, of Sydney, Austral'a, is in Montreal at the Place Viger. He is visiting Canada for the purpose of opening up a market for Australian hard woods, and also for placing several large orders for the Douglas firs of the Pacific coast.

In an interview this morning, Mr. Hudson stated that the Canadian lumbermen appeared to be ahead of the Australians in the style of machinery and in modernity of methods. The difference in the timber of the two countries necessitates different ways of handling logs, for whereas in Canada the logs are cut on the limits and floated down, in Australia the mill is situated in the limit itself, and the wood is of too heavy a quality to be floated, sinking very rapidly when submerged in water.

Mr. Hudson thinks that some of the Australian hardwood should find a ready sale in Canada, particularly the noted turpentine wood for wharf and deck piles. This wood is waterproof and immensely strong. Whereas the life of the ordinary wharf pile is about three years, a few months ago a turpentine-wood pile was removed from the old Pyrmont bridge at Sydney that had been 55 years in the water and was still as good as new.

Australia takes large quantities of Canadian timber, particularly British Columbia pine, fir and cedar. Sydney took 50,000,000 feet of Douglas fir and Melbourne 32,000,000 last year alone.

Mr. Hudson passed through the drought striken portions of Australia before leaving, and said that for miles and miles in New South Wales and Queensland the land was as bare and dry as one of Montreal's alleged macadamized streets. Sheep were perishing in scores of thousands, and ranchers were being ruined in hundreds. The wealthiest imported feed from Sydney to keep their flocks alive, but the majority had simply to watch them die. The drought is confined to these two states, fortunately and in other parts of the commonwealth the year has been a good one. Yet there will be a general depression next year in all branches of business on account of the bad season in New South Wales and Queensland, and Mr. Hudson foresee depressing times for the new commonwealth.

He leaves for New York to-morrow for the same purpose that brought him to Canada.
