JUBILEE SERVICES METHODIST CHURCH

Fiftieth Anniversary of First Methodist Church Celebrated Yesterday. Eloquent Sermons by Rev. Dr. Campbell and Rev. A. B. Simpson.
Special Music by Choir and Soloists

The celebration of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the First Methodist Church, Charlottetown, which is being held this week, was begun yesterday morning under happy auspices. Every seat in the Church being occupied, and the choir gallery filled. The service was highly impressive, and the music, under the able direction of Professor J. T. Thompson, was magnificent. The preacher was the Rev. G. M. Campbell, D.D., of Mount Allison, who is well known in Charlottetown. Dr. Campbell is an eloquent speaker, of striking personality, and his manner of address is forceful and compelling. Associated with him on the platform were Rev. Dr. A. B. Simpson, of New York, Rev. Dr. Hertz and the pastor of the church, Rev. J. L. Dawson. Dr. Hertz assisted in the conduct of the service.

Dr. Campbell preached a magnificent sermon on the absorbing topic of the day, his subject being "Some Lessons From the War." It was an eminently patriotic utterance, and the strong and fervent appeal which the preacher made to the young manhood of the congregation to rouse themselves to the full realization of their duty and discharge it for the preservation of the Empire could not be effective. Dr. Campbell took as his text the watchword of Exodus 14 and 15: "Forward!" Having congratulated the church on its jubilee, and referred to two occasions on which he held the relation of minister to the congregation, he proceeded to say that his text was a command that repeatedly echoed through the ranks of ancient Israel. It had inspired great world monarchies in their march of conquest and was perhaps the greatest of all thoughts—heritage, duty and hope. In order to emphasize heritage a contrast was drawn between the opening fifteen years of the nineteenth century and the opening years of the twentieth century. At the opening of the nineteenth century Great Britain was in the midst of a great war, standing comparatively alone. The genius of Napoleon was sweeping with a devastating power over the continent of Europe, and the great William Pitt, the Prime Minister, died of a broken heart because he thought of the battle of Austerlitz, the handwriting on the wall, announcing the fall of the British Empire. Then came Nelson to guide the fleet upon the sea, and Wellington to direct the armies upon the land, securing victory for the nation and peace for the Continent. Britain had that day until now Great Britain had had troubles within herself, and also had troubles about her, but history shows that out of all she has come victorious. To-day she is again in the forefront of the battle, but not alone. She stands upon the sacred soil of

Belgium, whose heroic sons have few equals and no superiors. Upon her right hand are the brave and daring sons of France, on her left the mighty legions of the great Slavonic race. Again has been demonstrated that which has appeared in all past history, that when the crisis comes the nation is ready with leadership and also with the men to be led. For against Nelson and Wellington the Empire faces today four outstanding names—Callaghan, Jellicoe, Kitchener and Roberts. The expansion of the British Empire is without parallel in history. It includes one-seventh of the world's area and one-quarter of its population. The Anglo-Saxon nation is the only nation that can colonise; the Anglo-Saxon race is the only race that can assimilate other races and impart to those races its own distinguishing characteristics and qualities and lose nothing in the transmission. These two statements were submitted to the congregation's knowledge of history. The demonstration was found in that Great Britain has fifty-four colonies and groups of colonies, the colonies as loyal to the Crown as England herself. When Queen Victoria was crowned in 1837, she became Queen over one hundred and thirty millions of people. The area of her empire was two million square miles. When her grandson ascended the throne he became King over four hundred millions of people, and the area of his Empire was eight million square miles. At the opening of the nineteenth century terrible evils existed in the land. The Corn Laws were the curse of the people; expenditure was boundless; taxation too heavy to be borne; criminal offences were so fearful and severe. Two hundred and twenty-three offences were punished with the death sentence; slavery obtained almost universally. Women were publicly flogged, children of six and seven worked long hours in the mines and mills, the manners of the people were coarse, blasphemy and intemperance were prevalent, the majority of the people ignorant, money was scarce, exports fell away, and the nation exhibited all the signs of decay. Then deliverance came in the introduction of the Reform Bill, in the emancipation of the children from factory and mine, in the provisions for education, in the extension of British commerce, in the organisation of missionary and foreign societies, until the rights of man and the respectability of the Empire is our heritage. It was founded and developed by our fathers; it cost much to lay its foundations. Every good work costs, every wise enactment, every uplifting propaganda must be paid for in coin of our present and future. It cost His Son His life to redeem humanity. It cost our fathers agony and bloody sweat, even unto death, to procure the heritage which we enjoy, and our duty is to preserve and maintain, to strengthen and to extend this splendid inheritance. This cannot be done unless righteousness is wrought into the lives of the people. It is useless to build upon any foundation but that of righteous character. There will be no fibre, no morality, no continuity in reforms, no permanence in movements unless in all, and through all, the great principles of righteousness. History in all its volumes vast emphasises this and this only, that righteousness exalts a nation and sin is a reproach to a people. This is the general word of duty that could have been spoken of year as well as now. As we have seen, it is at war. We ask, why is Britain at war? Three hundred years ago Spain was a great and powerful nation, with influential connections, and she set out to dominate Europe, and finding that Britain was her army to that domination, she sent her army to Albion's shores. You know the his- tory and you know how the name of Drake came out to be recorded in our island story. A hundred years came and passed, and Louis XIV. of France decided to adopt the policy of Spain and dominate Europe, and again Britain, led by Marlborough, stood in the way and showed how she ever was on the side of the weak and oppressed. And again a hundred years are numbered, and Napoleon has his vision of a conquered Europe, and again Britain is in the way of his realisation; and in the way of his realisation and Wellington the names of Nelson and Wellington and other hundred years have come and gone, and Britain stands with her Allies facing Germany and Austria and throwing the weight of her own influence for the liberty of the weak. Pressed and for reasons this nation is in the war: First, to save Belgium and redeem her pledged word; second, to safeguard the security of her own Empire; third, to maintain the sanctity of treaties and uphold integrity of nations; fourth, to prevent European falling under the domination of a military power. And the foe she faces is well prepared. For fifty years the men and women who have written the songs for Germany and the nursery rhymes for Germany and colleges have for German schools and the histories sown the seed, the harvest of which is now reaping to-day. Our foe is well prepared, magnificently equipped and without conscience. He has one great objective, and in reaching the end toward which he has been moving for fifty years the violation of Belgian

BRITAIN'S NEW GUN A GREAT SUCCESS

(Special to The Guardian.)
LONDON, Nov. 22.—Britain's new big gun, it is learned, is doing splendid work on the battle line in Flanders and France. On two occasions at least it was used to great effect, and in each case succeeded in inflicting heavy losses.

neutrality the assault upon France, the attack upon Russia, the war with Germany, the British wealth, British trade, British commerce; and if Germany succeeds Great Britain goes down, not to be a second-rate power, but to be a German dependency. It will be the passing of the Anglo-Saxon, the light of civilisation that shine over Europe will go out. If we fall, freedom, peace and our nation and all that appertains to our nation will pass to the limbo of things forgotten. Therefore the call is for men, for men, for more men. Therefore, young men of this congregation, the call to you is personal and every man soon or late. "And how can man die better than facing fearful odds, for the ashes of his fathers and the altars of his gods." Some of us cannot enlist, and yet the word has its application. Lord Kitchener put one hundred thousand fresh troops into the field and finance these troops will win. He has also declared that the battle will be won not only by the soldier at the firing line, but by men at home who keep the wheels of industry moving and furnish the comforts for the men; and as his part is who goeth down into the battle, so shall his part be that he shall share the stuff. They shall share and share alike.

In conclusion, Dr. Campbell said that he believed that a British victory could be held that faith because he believed in the Imperial destiny of Great Britain. The day had passed when the historian would write of Great Britain and her Colonies. The future historian would chronicle the deeds of the British Empire. He would be proud to be called Kipling's interesting story of the ship that found itself, he made the application to the present crisis and saw that one result of the campaign would be the unification of the Empire into a solid block of forces at all the dependencies and Dominions of the British Empire. Closing, he said:

"Men of Canada, your country is yet in its infancy, your history is only begun. But the people who have furnished leaders of conspicuous character, who have lived and died for a time and hopeful too of the coming men. The young men of Canada, ask only a fair field and no favour, will, upon the plains of France, make for themselves names and make for them, my brothers, in the way that stoops to nothing low, in the loyalty which will make every act of love a sacrament. Forward under that old flag which, notwithstanding Britain's faults and Britain's failures, has ever stood to proclaim liberty to the captive and to bring down the propitious bend of heaven comes equally near to every son of Adam. Hearken to the voices calling to you—home voices, world voices. Heed the call of the Motherland that sounds over the great Atlantic and falls upon our ears. Do not be disobedient to the supreme command. Your homes call, the nation calls, freedom calls, the wounded dove of peace calls; and God is sounding a trumpet that has never called retreat. He is marshalling now the hosts of men around His Judgment Seat. Be swift, my soul, to answer Him; be jubilant my feet; for God is marching on. In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea with a glory in His bosom that transfigures you and me. As He died to make men holy, let us die to keep men free, for our Lord is marching on."

At the evening service an excellent musical programme was carried out, toward which he has been moving for fifty years the violation of Belgian

LONDON, Nov. 22.—The Belgian commission of inquiry into the alleged German violation of the laws and customs of war, has issued another lengthy report which is published to-day by the British official bureau.

It covers what is described as the "Massacre at Tamines," "The sack of Dinant," and the "outrages in Belgium." Referring in detail to this alleged massacre, the report describes how a group of between 400 and 450 men were collected in front of the village church. As shooting them down with rifles proved too slow, German officers ordered up a machine gun, and those not killed by bullets from this weapon were finished with bayonet thrusts.

According to the commissioners more than 700 of the inhabitants of Dinant were killed.

Eighty-four of these were shot to death on parade square and 50 others outside a church from which they had been driven by the Germans.

The report alleges that over 1,000 similar executions occurred in the Province of Luxembourg.

Previously it has been reported that both the Winchester and the Kanawha, another fast yacht, had been sold, but this could not be confirmed, nor were the names of the supposed new owners given in the reports, although it was intimated that one of the European belligerents was the purchaser.
