CHEESE INSPIRATION FOR CANADIAN POET

Stars and love and nebulous fancies usually give rise to poetic imagination but substantial matter in the form of cheese stirred James McIntyre to pen an "Ode on Mammoth Cheese," the latter being a monster of 7,000 pounds produced to show what cheese factories of the Thames Valley of Ontario could do when that commodity was being established in the 70's and 80's as one of Canada's contributions to domestic and British larders. Canadain cheese today is in record demand and the Canadian National Railways note increasing consignments to the seaboard for shipment abroad. Canada produced 121,415,900 lbs. of cheese in 1938 with a value of $16,748,527. Ontario accounted for 86,085,900 lbs.; Quebec 27,779,100; Manitoba 3,509,200; Alberta 2,701,800; Saskatchewan 721,000; British Columbia 684,700; New Brunswick 544,500; Prince Edward Island 449,700; Nova Scotia 30,000. Nova Scotia has undertaken a campaign to increase her cheese production.

Swell Musical At Prince Edward

Eye-filling and ear-thrilling entertainment for the entire family on the screen of the Prince Edward Theatre where the new streamlined musical, "Two Girls on Broadway," opens today for an engagement of two days.

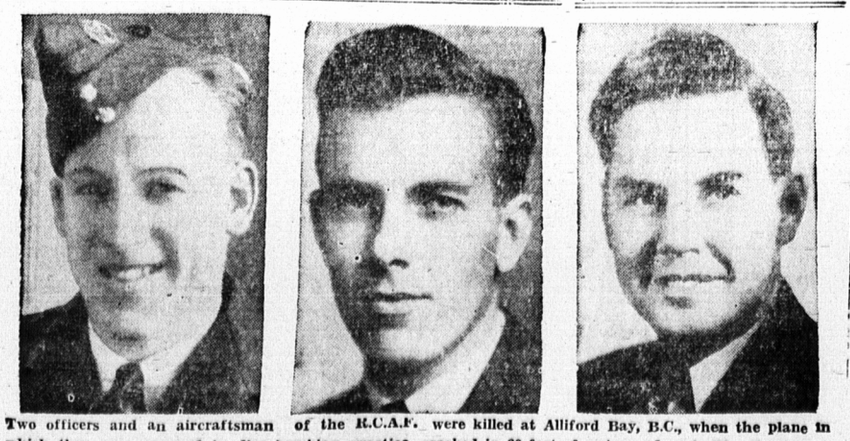
With a cast headed by Lana Turner, Joan Blondell and George Murphy, the musical drama proceeds through sixty minutes of well-rounded screen fare. Hit tunes coupled with lavish production numbers add to the dramatic story which tells of the love of two sisters for the same boy.

Lana Turner and George Murphy, in addition to being an effective romantic duo, promise to become one of the season's favorite dance teams. In their numbers together they are superb. Especially effective are "My Wonderful One Let's Dance" and "Broadway's Still Broadway." This definitely continues the popularity won by Murphy in his last film, "Broadway Melody of 1940," in which he appeared with Fred Astaire and Eleanor Powell, and assures Miss Turner new laurels as the high school and college boys' delight.

Joan Blondell, who makes her first appearance under the M-G-M banner in this film, gave a sterling performance in a role which contrasts sharply with her more familiar comedy characterizations. As the older sister, Molly Mahoney, who sacrificed her own happiness so that her younger sister might have a chance at romance, she registers a distinct dramatic triumph.

Others who acquit themselves creditably include Kent Taylor, Richard Lane, Wallace Ford, Otto Hahn, Lloyd Corrigan, Don Wilson and Charles Wagonheim.

The direction of S. Sylvan Simon plays a decided part in making "Two Girls on Broadway" one of the most entertaining and enjoyable musicals to be shown on the local screens in a long time.



Two officers and an aircraftsman of the R.C.A.F. were killed at Alliford Bay, B.C., when the plane in which they were engaged in dive-bombing practice crashed in 60 feet of water and sank. The three were Flying Officer Robert McGee Halpenny (LEFT), formerly a resident of Windsor; Flight Lieut. Allan Simpson (CENTRE), of Thompson, Man., and Leading Aircrafstman Robert Lawson Richardson (RIGHT) of Winnipeg and Vancouver.

BADLY WRECKED CAR. —Lady Luck must certainly have been smiling on two men, Donald Fraser and Robert Weir of the city, who were injured in an automobile accident at Mud Creek in Albert County, on Sunday afternoon. The 1936 Chevrolet coupe in which they were driving is almost a total wreck as it rests in Humphrey's garage. Their physician told the Transcript that although results from X-ray pictures taken of the men were not available as yet he did not think that they were seriously injured. Both men are sufefring from shock and abrasions about the head and face. The car, which is registered in the name of Austin L. Brooks, of Summerside, P.E.I., according to eye-witnesses, rolled completely over in the highway and crashed into the ditch. Both men were thrown clear of the car. It is thought that a blown-out tire might have been the cause of the car leaving the road. It was proceeding toward Hillsboro at the time. The car has the steel roof crushed in and the windshield broken out while the fenders and body of the car are badly twisted and bent, with the tire, one door and a wheel off the car covered with oil and mud it is a sorry looking mess now.—Moncton Transcript.

Something New For Islanders

Do you know about the Superfluity Shops which have operated in other cities? The idea is simply this: to collect the things people do not want and sell them to people who do want them. Its like the miracle of the loaves and the fishes.

In Victoria, where the idea originated, the Superfluities Store was so successful that in the first three months the proceeds were $3,350, and stocks were so depleted that a call went out for more contributions to meet the tourist trade of Spring and Summer, particularly for "chinaware, brassware, copper, silver and antiques which are of interest to our visitors from south of the Border." Other articles which have been found to be readily saleable include: furniture, toys, books, glass, pictures, radios, gramophones, musical instruments, trays, tools, ornaments, leather goods, luggage, mirrors, jewellery, plants and bulbs. The articles are sorted, priced, displayed and sold by an entirely volunteer staff.

A shop on Great George St., has been generously placed at disposal of volunteer workers by the Tanton Estate. Donations may be left with Mrs. A. E. Morrison, Prince Street or donations will be called for starting Monday 12th. Phone 228 or 459-L

82 English School Children Land In Canada

By Douglas How
Canadian Press Staff Writer

AN EAST COAST CANADIAN PORT, Aug. 2 —(CP) —Eighty-two English school-children slept peacefully on Canadian soil tonight, their government-paid voyage from their warring homeland a thing of the past.

Their shrill voices pouring out the words of "There'll Always Be An England" and "Roll Out The Barrel" into a stiff Atlantic breeze, the evacuees got their first glimpse of their new home country from the rail of a liner that docked here late this afternoon.

They formed the first group to leave England under the government's evacuation plan. Forty other paying passengers, many of them Jewish refugees, were also aboard but only about half of their number disembarked.

The others will leave the ship at an American port.

A report was circulated among some of the passengers that the convoy with which the vessel sailed from Britain had been attacked.

By ones and twos, then in swelling groups, the children poured down from the gangplank. It was hours later before they saw anything but busy immigration or customs officers and the bleak grey walls of the dockyard shed.

One of the first groups to be cleared of hindering red-tape at this port were the 28 children who will spend the duration of the war in Nova Scotia. Sixteen will reside in New Brunswick, six in Quebec and the others will go to various destinations elsewhere in the Dominion.

Officials classed all but 26 of the arrivals as "nominated" children. In other words, they have homes to go to.

Quieter Here

The other 26 will be placed in some of the 200 homes offered by Nova Scotians when the government first announced the evacuation scheme. With sparkling eyes, the children gave assurances "It's ever so much quieter" here than in England.

Slightly Frightened

One little girl, a negro doll tucked under her arm, told of a day in which German air raiders came over her hometown three times. "It makes you slightly frightened," she admitted, only to blush under the scorn of her older, red-headed brother.

Another youngster granted life in Canada would be satisfactory but "I've got to have my tea."

He had his tea and a hearty Canadian meal shortly. The children ate a big meal placed before them on tables prepared in the immigration headquarters.

They climbed between blankets here tonight for their first night in Canada. Officials said, "they'll go west in the morning."

The smiling lady in charge of the party of children ranging in age from five to 15, was Miss Edith Gowans. She told reporters she was "on loan from the British Red Cross for this trip."

Except for the fall of France she would now be in that country. Her luggage had already been placed aboard a ship when orders came to cancel the trip. France sued for peace shortly after.

MORSE'S SELECTED ORANGE PEKOE is a "stand-out" tea in the Maritimes. So blended it has been said that it leaves nothing to be desired.

Awakened Woman
— By —
ELINORE BARRY

can do anything for her . . . Did you say she'd had anything to eat today?"

That must be Laurine! The voice moved nearer as if its owner were approaching the stairs. Joyce, in a panic, looked wildly about for some escape. Couldn't she have one day to herself? She thought of locking the door. Then, afraid to delay another second, she dashed out to the sleeping porch pulled down the covers of the neatly-made bed, and slid between the sheets. With thumping heart she half-buried her face in the pillow, shut her eyes tightly and tried to compose herself into a state where she could breathe quietly.

Firm steps sounded approaching the door, and a voice said, "Frills? Where are you? . . . Oh!" The voice trailed off into a soft murmur as the speaker evidently discovered the sleeping form in the bed.

The caller stood quietly by the bedside for such a long time that Joyce grew nervous. Why didn't the woman go away? Couldn't she see that Frills was asleep? Or did she guess that she was shamming?

Just as she felt that she could not stand it a minute longer, and must either giggle or choke, she heard her unseen caller depart.

"Thank goodness! . . . My, I'm roasted!" She threw off the covers and got up cautiously, creeping into the room to listen to what happened downstairs. She heard the same voice speaking but could not distinguish the words. Finally, however, the front door opened and closed.

So rested and so much more confident did she find herself that she decided to do downstairs, risking the meeting with any callers who might appear.

Roxie was by one of the windows reading a newspaper. Seeing Joyce, she stood up.

"I slept longer than I expected to," said Joyce, "and I'm sort of hungry," she said, finding it impossible not to slip into a conciliatory tone and attitude. "Is there something to eat I could have, I wonder?"

"Why, of course, ma'am," replied Roxie promptly "would you like a regular lunch or just tea?"

"Tea, please." The very thought was luxurious.

"Certainly, ma'am. Would you like sandwiches with it, or just cake?"

"Oh, sandwiches, please. I'm so hungry. And I wonder if . . ." she went on, uncomfortably convinced that Frills never asked for anything in this apologetic fashion, "—er—I'd like some orange juice to drink too."

"Yes, ma'am. Will you have it out on the terrace or up in your room?"

Joyce decided hastily that she would take a chance. "On the terrace, please."

She enjoyed the food almost more than her breakfast, reflecting with half-ashamed amusement that her appetite was good in spite of the shock of awaking to find herself Mrs. Neil Packard. Ought any one in her terrible predicament enjoy food so enthusiastically?

She was just draining the last drop of orange juice and wishing regretfully that she had more, when a man's voice at the doorway startled her so, she nearly dropped the glass.

"My Lord, Frills, since when have you taken to drinking orange juice?"

A man crossed the terrace with quick steps, sat down on a chair close beside her and leaning forward looked at her with an expression of lively concern.

"Did I startle you? Sorry! I guess your nerves are jumpy after what happened. How do you feel, sweetheart?"

Joyce had been completely taken by surprise and, in her condition of excited apprehension, his entrance upset her so thoroughly that she could scarcely speak.
