The 7 DIALS MYSTERY

By Agatha Christie

ON EARLY RISING

That amiable youth, Jimmy Thresher, came racing down the big staircase at Chimneys two steps at a time. So precipitate was his descent that he collided with Tredwell, the stately butler, just as the latter was crossing the hall bearing a fresh supply of hot coffee. Owing to the marvellous presence of mind and masterly agility of Tredwell, no casualty occurred.

"Sorry," apologized Jimmy. "I say, Tredwell, am I the last down?" "No, sir, Mr. Wade has not come down yet."

"Good," said Jimmy, and entered the breakfast room. The room was empty save for his hostess, and her reproachful gaze gave Jimmy the same feeling of discomfort he always experienced on catching the eye of a defunct codfish exposed on a fishmonger's slab. Yet, hang it all, why should the woman look at him like that? To come down at a punctual nine-thirty when staying in a country house simply wasn't done. To be sure, it was now a quarter past eleven which was, perhaps, the outside limit, but even then—

"Afraid I'm a bit late, Lady Coote. What?" "Oh! It doesn't matter," said Lady Coote in a melancholy voice.

A DEADLY SIN

As a matter of fact, people being late for breakfast worried her very much. For the first ten years of her married life, Sir Oswald Coote (then plain Mr.) had, to put it baldly, raised heck if his morning meal were even a half minute later than 8 o'clock. Lady Coote had been disciplined to regard unpunctuality as a deadly sin of the most unpardonable nature. And habit dies hard. Also, she was an earnest woman, and she could not help asking herself what possible good these young people would ever do in the world without early rising. As Sir Oswald so often said, to reporters and others: "I attribute my success entirely to my habits of early rising frugal living, and methodical habits."

Lady Coote was a big, handsome woman in a tragic sort of fashion. They had lived very happily first in a couple of rooms, and then in a tiny house, and then in successive houses of increasing magnitude, but always within a reasonable distance of "the Works" until now Sir Oswald had reached such an eminence that he and "the Works" were no longer interdependent, and it was his pleasure to rent the very largest and most magnificent mansions available all over England. Chimneys was a historic place and in renting it from the Marquis of Caterham for two years, Sir Oswald felt that he had attained the top notch of his ambition.

A LONELY WOMAN

Lady Coote was not nearly so happy about it. She was a lonely woman. The principal relaxation of her early married life had been talking to "the girl"—and even when "the girl" had been multiplied by three, conversation with her domestic staff had still been the principal distraction of Lady Coote's day. Now, with a pack of housemaids, a butler like an archbishop, several footmen of imposing proportions, a bevy of scuttling kitchen and scullery maids, a terrifying foreign chef with a "temperament" and a housekeeper of immense proportions who alternately creaked and rustled when she moved, Lady Coote was as one marooned on a desert island. She sighed now, heavily, and drifted out through the open window, much to the relief of Jimmy Thresher, who at once helped himself to more kidneys and bacon on the strength of it.

Lady Coote stood for a few moments tragically on the terrace and then nerved herself to speak to MacDonald, the head gardener, who was surveying the domain over which he ruled with an autocratic eye. MacDonald was a very chief and prince among head gardeners. He knew his place—which was to rule. And he ruled—despotically.

Lady Coote approached him nervously. "Good morning, m'lady." "Good morning, m'lady."

He spoke as head gardeners should speak—mournfully but with dignity—like an emperor at a funeral.

"I was wondering—could we have some of those late grapes for dessert tonight?"

"They're not fit for picking yet," said MacDonald.

He spoke kindly but firmly. "Oh," said Lady Coote. She plucked up courage.

"Oh! but I was in the end house yesterday, and I tasted one and they seemed very good."

AN UNPARDONABLE LIBERTY

MacDonald looked at her, and she blushed. She was made to feel that she had taken an unpardonable liberty. Evidently the late Marchioness of Caterham had never committed such a solecism as to enter one of her own hothouses and help herself to grapes.

"If you had given orders m'lady a bunch should have been cut and sent in to you," said MacDonald severely.

"Oh! thank you," said Lady Coote. "Yes, I will do that another time."

MacDonald touched his hat and moved away.

Lady Coote sighed unhappily and looked after him. Jimmy Thresher, replete with kidneys and bacon, stepped out on the terrace beside her, and sighed in quite a different manner.

"Topping morning, eh?" he remarked.

"Is it?" said Lady Coote, absently. "Oh! yes, I suppose it is. I hadn't noticed."

"Where are the others? Punting on the lake?"

"I expect so, I mean, I shouldn't wonder if they were."

Lady Coote turned and plunged abruptly into the house again. Tredwell was just examining the coffee pot.

"Oh, dear," said Lady Coote. "Isn't Mr.—Mr.—"

"Wade, m'lady?" "Yes, Mr. Wade. Isn't he down yet?"

"No, m'lady." "It's very late."

"Yes, m'lady." "Oh! dear. I suppose he will come down sometime. Tredwell?"

"Oh, undoubtedly, m'lady. It was 11:30 yesterday morning when Mr. Wade came down, m'lady."

Lady Coote glanced at the clock. It was now twenty minutes to 12. A wave of human sympathy rushed over her.

"It's very hard luck on you, Tred-

TROPICAL PEOPLE SMALLER EATERS THAN CANADIANS

Scientific Experiments Reveal Interesting Information

It's your food that gives you your bodily heat. The colder you are, the more you eat.

Some such jingle is suggested by scientific experiments which have extended as far back as 1780.

The French scientist Lavoisier (who lived in that period) was the first to apply the thermometer and the balance to the study of the chemical changes taking place in the living body, according to Dr. E. V. McCollum. "Lavoisier established the fundamental fact that the production of heat involved the combination of the oxygen of the air with the substances taken into the body as food and was in fact a process of combustion," he says.

Dr. McCollum went on to say that Lavoisier also discovered that the temperature of the air had a pronounced influence on the rate at which this "burning" of food takes place. It is slow at temperatures which we find comfortable with light clothing, and is greatly accelerated by cold. This gives the clear reason why people living in a hot climate are lighter eaters than those living in a temperate climate.

Canadians are fairly large eaters for this reason. But are Canadians better nourished than the smaller eaters of the tropics? The size of the meal unfortunately does not regulate this point. The large meal which produces plenty of body "heat" may be sadly lacking in other elements which are needed for rich blood, muscle and bone development.

The best plan is to eat every day some food which you know supplies these other needs. Millions of people are doing this in a most delicious way at breakfast. They find nothing more tempting than the crisp, golden kernels of Grape-Nuts with rich milk or cream. Grape-Nuts supplies to their bodies five of the vital elements of nutrition. These are: iron, for the blood; phosphorus, for teeth and bone; protein, for muscle and body-building; dextrins, maltose and other carbohydrates for energy; and the valuable vitamin-B.

well. Having to clear and then get lunch on the table by 1 o'clock.

"I am accustomed to the ways of young gentlemen, m'lady."

The reproof was dignified, but unmistakable. So might a prince of the Church reprove a Turk or an infidel who had unwittingly committed a solecism in all good faith.

Lady Coote blushed for the second time.
