ARRIVAL
Chapter 6

Amy looked that the shabby place should look like very best, and she had the good sense to know that fresh flowers, even in cracked jars, helped enormously. It was the last and the pleasantest of her household duties, and she did not get around to it until the very hour of their arrival. Meantime their own early supper had been eaten and cleared away, and Mr. Talbot had gone off to Hornbrook with the team of horses and a wagon large enough to hold the trunks.

Mrs. Talbot, stiffly dressed in her best gown—which had been her best for the last five years—sat in a rocker on the porch. She was thoroughly exhausted although thoroughly happy. Biscuits were ready to go into the oven as soon as the team should appear, the table was spread for a cold supper in the little used dining room in the farm house. The whole place was spotless and as stiff in its immaculate precision as the high collar on her dress.

Amy, in her black serge skirt and the new waist Mrs. Talbot had somehow found time to make, sat on the lawn below her, trimming the edge of the flower beds. Amy had to go on working. She was very much excited over the coming of the new sister-in-law, and when she was excited she could never keep still. In the fading day her hair shone with a light of its own, a coppery red flame that made a halo around her head.

"Luther was a good boy," the mother said, smoothing out her best handkerchief with the lace frill. "He didn't get into mischief like the other boys, and he didn't like to play pranks. He used to be a lot of help to my father around the place here when we were too poor to afford a hired man. He'd finish up his farm work first before he'd do his studying."

"Then he sat up all night studying to pass his examinations," Amy said, having some recollections of her own. "He worked almost till dawn, and at dawn he had to get up to do the milking."

"He passed his college examinations," Mrs. Talbot said, as though this ended the matter.

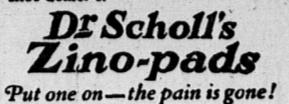

"Yes, and he got sick as soon as he was in college, and was on studying just the same. He was sick when he took his first job, and he's never gotten over trying to work and study at the same time. Father might have hired a man, or else not done so much work around the place.

"You shouldn't criticise your father, it's wicked," the mother exclaimed, angrily.

Amy did not answer, but worked faster trimming the ragged grass around the huge grey eyes of her brother's that stared so out of his hollow face when he was trying to do a double duty—his duty to his father, who demanded manual labor, and to himself to get out of the stifling atmosphere of his home.

Luther had always been so gentle so very good, so strict in all his principles. He never rebelled against his father's harshness nor criticised his mother for her narrowness. He lectured Amy in the gentlest fashion for the little deceptions, and nothing ever would tempt him to do anything he did not approve.

Jordan Talbot, recognizing his son's goodness, thought of making him a minister, and was bitterly disappointed when the boy himself decided to become a civil engineer.

Luther, in spite of his gentleness and goodness had a sense of fun and was adored by his two sisters.

"There was a long silence while Amy pouted at her scolding and went on with her work, and while he mother thought back over her son's childhood and her own married life. It had been a bitterly hard life. She herself could not possibly know how hard. Two children had been born and died at birth, after Luther had come, and had been the fourth child and the second to grow up. She was 25 now, and between her and Amy lay seven years of struggle with deadening poverty and hard work. Another child, a son, was born and lived only a month, and after that Mrs. Talbot had been ill, and for three years did not go further than the grounds of her own yard.

Amy was born when there was a little more money, and Amy, according to her mother's standard, had been spoiled. Amy wanted things beyond a mother's comprehension. Amy said things she could not approve of. She was afraid whenever she thought of the girl's future—she wished she were "married and safe."

She wondered what effect Luther's life would have on Amy, and while she was wondering the sound of trotting horses came to her and the team drew up at the gate. The tall form of her son jumped from the carriage and turned to lift down another form, that of a woman. An unknown voice exclaimed in dismay:

"Oh, is this the place?"

Monday—Claire.

Turn Hair Dark With Sage Tea

If Mixed with Sulphur It Darkens So Naturally Nobody Can Tell

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grand mother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite possible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive.

Hops Left to Rot in Kentish Fields

(By Dominion News Service)

—MILDSTONE, Oct. 19.—The Kent hop harvest is over. It has lasted barely a fortnight, and has been the shortest on record.

Only part of the crop has been gathered. Many tons of the choicest hops, cultivated at great expense, are left to blow away and rot because the Hop Controller has set a definite and drastic limit to the amount of hops he will buy from each grower.

The position is extraordinary. G. Foster Clark, the Hop Controller, the only person permitted to purchase hops, estimated his requirements from home growers at 260,000 cwt. The crop is estimated to be 220,000 cwt., but by the curious operation of the Hop Controller's rigid system, he will receive, not the full 220,000 cwt., but only 180,000 cwt.

This peculiar state of affairs arises because the Hop Controller laid down a definite crop allowance for each individual grower, based on the average yield per acre, and adhered rigidly to his "quota" contract.

The grower had to reckon on sun, wind, and rain. He had to consider pests, labour, and a dozen other factors. He was almost as badly off as Shylock cutting his exact pound of flesh.

Some growers grow too many hops; some too few. Those with too many must let them blow away; those with too few have lost business.

The restrictions were ordered by the Controller owing to the necessity of permitting the importation of a certain amount of foreign hops to meet the requirements of brewers, who need them for blending with English hops.

Bachelor Baronet Spoke too Soon

(By Dominion News Service)

LONDON, Oct. 19.—Sir George A. H. Beaumont, of Cole Orton Hall, Leicestershire, who last January told his tenantry that he had remained single because he had never met a woman whom he loved more than his mother, is now about to marry.

When he made his confession at the annual dinner, where the tribute to Lady Beaumont was received with cheers, it was early hinted that "there was still time."

Sir George's engagement has now been announced the prospect, his bride being Miss Renne Northey, second daughter of Major General Sir Edward Northey and Lady Northey, of Woodcote House, Epsom.

Forty-two years of age, Sir George is the only son of the late baronet, whom he succeeded in 1914. He served as an officer in the King's Royal Rifles during the European War from 1914 to 1918, and was wounded.

The family has for generations lived at Cole Orton.

Miss Northey, who is described as a very pretty girl, will be 21 at Christmas.

MEN WANTED

Two hundred workmen for Fleming Gibson Ltd., Juniper, N. B. Leaving Charlottetown, Wednesday Oct. 24th. Fare paid. Best wages. Inquire Guy Welch Revere Hotel.

Various methods were employed by occupiers to destroy rats. One or other of the rat-catchers working in the city were engaged by business firms in 82 instances. Poisons were laid down by 462 firms, and traps of the break-back description were used in 463 premises and wire traps in 146. Various traps, which are used in special circumstances, were relied upon in 259 premises.

Cats and dogs were kept in 271 premises. Various sewerage and drainage works, all of which tended to reduce the number of breeding places for rats, had been carried out in 600 instances. One firm of rat-catchers alone caught 20,358 rats in the city last year. The fact that accommodation in increasing amount, for consuming food on the premises, is being provided for employees is responsible for attracting rats to places previously free from them.

"Well, yes," he admitted, "it is a little trying sometimes. Still, there're advantages in the arrangement. I don't need to go to the expense of a weathercock to tell which way the wind's blowing!"

HIS WIRELESS TIPS.

Contentment is a beautiful thing, and it was touchingly exemplified the other day by a dweller in a new residential neighborhood. His little nest was surrounded by factories at all parts of the compass. A gas company was on the south, chemicals were made in the east, a glue factory performed in the north, and a soap-boiler the west.

"A trifle odiferous—eh?" said a pitying visitor of our friend.
