WATCH THE VOICE

Even the human voice plays its part in creating health, says an authority in the Department of National Health and Welfare, Ottawa. It works this way voices influence others: if a person has a pleasing voice, that improves the personality and acceptability: to be socially acceptable brings happiness, and happiness, in turn, brings health. Monotonous, shrill and high pitched voices as well as slurred and mumbled words, lessen chances for happiness.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY IN CANADA AND NEWFOUNDLAND

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AUXILIARY

"For our persecuted brethren on the Continent of Europe, the Bible has become, I suppose, for thousands in quite a new way a living word and a contemporary word."
—Dr. N. Micklem

1. The Society has joined ed with other Societies in sending the Scriptures to enemy controlled countries, in Europe, to the limit of possibility.
2. The Society, in co-operation with the American Bible Society, has placed large orders for the printing of Scriptures in Sweden, for liberated lands.
3. The Society in wartime has endeavoured to meet special demands and is preparing to seize opportunities for Scripture publication and circulation which the post-war world will undoubtedly demand.

Have you thought of the place of the Bible in the education and re-education of nations?

Through a gift to the P. E. I. Auxiliary or Branch you can promote the new civilization which this world sorely needs.

LESSON V—SENIOR
ALCOHOL AND REACTION TIME

Alcohol Speaking:

In athletics, a good start is always half the race. It has been observed that if you use me you are the last to get off when the gun is fired. This is due to the fact that I slow up your reaction time. "Reaction time" means the time that elapses between the application of a stimulus, in this case the firing of the gun, and the beginning of a response, which in this instance, would be your start of the race. Your start may be delayed from one-fifth to four-fifths of a second. That means that your competitors are well on the way before you even get started. Besides, your movements during the race are slower and less well co-ordinated.

Connie Mack, famous baseball manager, said: "I will not bother with youngsters who drink, for the game requires quick thinking and clean living." He has added to this the statement: "Old Man Booze has put more men out of the game than all the umpires together." Helen Wills Moody, formerly world champion in tennis, has said that a glass of beer on the tennis court makes the sight wobbly. Knute Rockne, the famous football coach of Notre Dame University, forbade poisons like alcohol to players both in and out of season. Durig, the famous scientist found, after a small drink of alcohol it took him twenty-five minutes longer to make a certain mountain ascent than when he did it without alcohol. Sir Frederick Treves said of a forced march of British soldiers in Africa during the Boer War, that "The drinkers dropped out just as clearly as if they had been labelled." Clarence DeMar, the famous runner of the Boston Marathon, a distance of about twenty-six miles, has won that race seven times, the last when he was forty-two. No other runner has won it more than twice. DeMar does not use alcohol.

I Make You Dangerous When You Drive Your Car

Most traffic accidents occur, as Dr. Emil Bogen has put it, because (1) the driver didn't remember a safety rule; (2) the driver didn't react quickly enough to what he saw or heard; or (3) because the driver decided to "take a chance."

Experience has shown that it normally takes one-fifth of a second to "put on the brakes." The small amount of alcohol in a glass of beer, about two teaspoonfuls, is enough to delay your reaction time two-fifths of a second or more. If you were travelling sixty miles an hour, and suddenly found yourself in danger, you would travel more than fifty feet farther before stopping your car than if you were not under the influence of alcohol. Think of what could happen in those fifty feet!

It has also been found through experiment that the "span" of vision is narrowed, even by the effect of the alcohol in a glass of beer. Ordinarily, if you are looking ahead, you can see your fingers touch your shoulders when you place them in this side position. This width or breadth of view is what is spoken of as your span of vision. If alcohol narrows this span you will see less of what might be coming into your particular location from the sides, and thus cause many accidents.

The normal eye can see distinctly thirty feet ahead. As much alcohol as is found in a glass or two of beer has been found by experiment to reduce this distance as much as one-third. That is, a small amount of alcohol could easily reduce normal vision to only twenty feet ahead.

Red and green lights are the signals for danger and safety respectively. It has been found by experiment, although long recognized generally, that the alcohol in a glass of beer dims the perception of colours in many drivers; the red seemed less red and the green less green. Such an effect may lead you to proceed when you should stop, and thus cause a serious accident.

Because of these effects of alcohol, laws have been passed the world over prohibiting you from driving your car when you are under the influence of this narcotic poison. Thus intelligent humanity speaks against the use of ethyl alcohol as a beverage. And in so condemning me they speak the truth about me, although they do not know that truth as well as I do.

Youth: I certainly have learned much, and I hardly know how to thank you. Few people will tell the truth about themselves as you have just done.

Mr. Alcohol: As you may guess, I seldom tell the truth about myself either, but, as I told you, I cannot lie in the laboratory. What do you think of me now?

Youth: As far as I am concerned, I am going to leave you alone, and also advise my friends to avoid you. I can see that you have some use in the world, but good, common sense tells me that I'd be risking a lot to use you as a beverage.

Mr. Alcohol: And you would be. But if I meet you outside the laboratory, I'll do my best to persuade you to use me. I know how to make myself attractive.

Youth: Thanks for the tip. After this frank talk, I'll be dumb, indeed, if I let you fool me. And I don't think you will."

QUESTIONS

1. (a) What is "reaction time"? Value 5 marks.
(b) What effect has alcohol upon "reaction time"? Value 5 marks.
2. How does alcohol increase highway accidents? Value 10 marks.

Those aged 12, 13, 14 yrs. answer Question No. 1, those aged 15, 16 and 17 yrs. answer both.

LESSON V. November 10.

(Junior)

A QUIZ OR QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS by Pearl Griffin

The children were all eager and ready for Miss Brown's class. It was to be "Question and Answer Day" she said.

"All right," said Miss Brown. "I'll start! Where did Policeman Bill and Sam take the Juniors on our first Sunday?"

"First to the scene of an accident, then a street fight, then to a house where a baby had been injured," said Mary.

"What caused each accident?" said Miss Brown.

"Alcohol," said John. "There was a drunken driver, then, two drunken men were fighting and a drunken man was trying to carry a baby. I have a question. What made these men drink in the first place?"

"Someone offered it to them," said Jean.

"But they didn't have to take it," said John.

"It would be hard to refuse." said Bill.

"My uncle Bill said when he was overseas he found it hard, because the other chaps seemed as nice as he was."

"My Uncle Jim had a way," said Betty.

"He took some soft drink instead of an alcoholic drink. He said the other men did not seem offended. They liked him and didn't offer it to him once they knew how he felt about it."

"Everybody likes my Uncle Jim," finished Betty.

"Sure," said Jim. "He is a swell fellow."

"He solved his own problem," said Miss Brown.

"If every one did that, it would help solve the big problem."

"Here's a funny one!" said Bill. "The other night at our house, a man said, 'You just can't be rude and refuse to take a drink when one is offered.' Then he said to my mother. 'No indeed, thank you, I never drink tea nor coffee. They don't agree with me.'"

The children laughed.

Literature And Life

By Bookman

"That."

Sir Joshua Reynolds was once taken by a friend to see a picture, and was anxious to be able to compliment the painter on his production; but as he looked it over and over with a keenly critical but kindly eye, he said, "capital composition, correct drawing; colour, tone, chiaroscure excellent but... but... it wants, hang it, it wants—That." snapping his fingers as he said it; and wanting "that", though it had everything else, it was really worth nothing.

What did he mean by "that"? It was that indefinable something which gives life to art. It is that something which we miss in a product which seems to fulfill so many of the demands of technique, and yet fails miserably.

For instance, we hear players on musical instruments whose teachers did all they could for them; in fact all they had they received. Thus, they touched the keys, or drew a bow across strings, but it was not music, though "faultily faultless, icily regular, splendidly null, dead perfection—no more." It wanted what Reynolds called "that."

So too in song. Two decades ago, sitting in a church, I heard a choir render an anthem. One of the lines was "Lest I sleep the sleep of the dead," from a Hebrew psalm. The word "dead" was sung with such expression, feeling and suggestiveness, that till this day when I hear it sung, I wait till the singer comes to that word, but seldom are the old echoes awakened that I heard on that far away morning. It had the indefinable "that" which finds the heart. John MacCormick had it and many others whom we have heard.

This is true of poetry. There may be measured numbers and words that are not worn threadbare, that are not just current coin. It may enshrine an idea and do it beautifully but unless it is bathed in the 'light that never was on sea or land", unless it has "that", no echo is awakened in the soul.

Now, what is it? We have indirectly seen that it is not just technique, it is not merely good deft workmanship, it is not knowledge. It cannot be got by industry, though it is not to be associated with laziness. When a Greek philosopher would account for it, he would call it "madness." A biblical writer speaks of something as capricious as the wind. So strange was its origin that it was cryptically referred to the muses. Inspiration is the name it goes by. Shelley said this about it: "A man can not say, I will compose poetry, for the mind in creation is like a fading coal which some invisible influence unlike an inconstant wind awakens to transitory brightness." Are we any wiser? Be that as it may, we have a faculty that recognises it in speech or song or in any attempt at the soul's expression. Wherever it is, an artistic achievement is thereby lifted up into a realm where cold criticism is rendered speechless. Thus Shelley speaks of the artist's work:

"But from dreams create he can
Forms more real than living Man,
Nurslings of Immortality."

Again, this is the secret of what we call personality. I recall a snatch of a song I heard many years ago in praise of woman. The song extolled her virtues, but in trying to account for the charm, said: "It is just her way". It was not in dress though that counted; it was not in voice though that was part of it. It was what Reynolds missed in the picture—"that". Artifice may mislead some, but there is a "deep" in us that reaches but to a "deep" in life—one responds to the other, and you have an impression which defies analysis. It is a combination of qualities, not any one of them, but something which unifies them all, fuses them. It is not just the standarized life. It is what we mean when we say he is a "personality." The little song came near to it when it said: "It is just her way."

Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

end. The Kelly cow's impatient lowing hung mournfully on the quiet air as she with the other two of our small herd waited at the bars of their pasture to be let to the milking. And James, alone, intent only on making good use of the brightness yet remaining, worked away at the turnips.

* * *

Today, however "all hands" and both "cooks" were taken into service and as James, in his old armchair remarked to Mr. C. our hilltop neighbor, a moment ago: "Well" he said a pucker of the old dimple showing "we couldn't have done better at them than we did today." And all the time. I was remembering our day of rest tomorrow. But how can I rest knowing full well that there is a roll of dust beneath the old bed in the room above the kitchen and that the front stairs have not been swept for more than a week? There was no chance to shirk outdoor duties in connection with the turnip-harvesting today. Did I commence to cream the shortenin' and sugar for a cake "for Sunday," I would scarcely have begun it before the rumble of the laden farm cart's return was to be heard, high above the gentle song of the tea-kettle or the sputter of the ideal baking fire. Today the storing was in the cellar of this house and on this account I was unable to find a good excuse for any absence from my set task, which today was to help at the unloading. Jock did the ferrying home this year, and if at a crucial moment in the backing-up, which sets the load in place at a chute, I missed James' insistent: "Now then, Ellen, help your wheel!" I suppose it was that queer and inexplicable thing known as force of habit gained through years and years of apprenticeship that made me spring to my place without the asking.

* * *

This year a sizable, and tilted platform attached to the old beams in the cellar received the turnips as they rushed in from the chute, shedding them at once in every direction. This made the storing an easier work and for some of the time did away with the necessity of a helper in the cellar, though as the space filled, one became necessary. Jeanie, it was, who took that shift, and then the babe and her grandmother were able to visit comfortably in the house across the lane.

* * *

So today, our Saturday's housework was done in those short but blessed intervals known to farm wives as "between times" in deference to the field work, and considering as James points out "the day of the year." "Yes" he tells Mr. C. obviously tired with his day at the seed potato grading as well as numerous calls to the mill "on the whole, I am well pleased with the amount we cut and saved today. Another day or two and we'll be done of them." And reviewing the recent days of it, I wonder, if ever we had a busier week or one that we spent more pleasantly. And if we regretted October's departure, for never before has there been one more pleasant in our memory, doubtless November will have its moments. If there will doubtless be odd melancholy days. So far, the sunshine and gold of October lingers but the breezes are keener as they come down along our valley. This week brought to youngsters and grown-ups the intriguing delights of Hallowe'en and all of us at Alderlea and our visitors enjoyed, at a comfortable distance, of course, a ghostly creature of a fellow and a cute witch on her broomstick, when the lights on Rob's truck caught up with them on the lawn and about the yard. We had pop-corn and apples and some of Karolyn's fudge that night and then near the witching hour read fortunes in our empty teacups. Happy, Jack o' Lanterns were our silent companions and I heard pixies and what-not about the place once the darkness closed in. I remembered too those who visited us on former Hallowe'ens, scattered now from the community, like the fluff of thistle down, one lad as far as the foot-hills of The Rockies. This then has been our "petty round" this week, and nothing in it has been at all "irritating" for always there is so much to interest and delight those of us who live on Island farms.

And if to some at times.
"The job that's nearest may not be,
What we would choose if we were free.
Our task perhaps seems slight and small.
Yet it is not really so at all.
Each bit of work that's finely wrought,
With care and skill and loving thought
Is precious metal, wealth untold—so little—yet of shining gold."

Until Monday— Diary —Goodnight.
