CHURCH NOTICE. - The United Church of Canada, Hunter River Pastoral Charge: Services will be as follows: Hunter River 11.00 A. M. Hampshire 3.00 P. M. Wiltshire 7.30 P. M. All services on Sunday will be conducted by Rev. E. L. Milley, B. A., of Breadalbane. Beginning on Tuesday, November 4th and each night of the week except Saturday special services will be held at Wheatley and the partial result of the servicemen's vote gave Liberal H. D. Madden only 19 more votes than Conservative J. J. Cameron, a member of the last House.

Madden had 2,450 compared with Cameron's 2,440. Only six of those votes—four for Cameron—were put into the boxes by servicemen, however, so the result of the last 11 polls would have to be much heavier than the first 20 to cause a change.

FAREWELL PARTY. - A very enjoyable evening was held on Thursday, Oct. 16th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry MacLean, Clyde River, when upwards of one hundred and twenty-five neighbours and friends of this and surrounding districts gathered for the purpose of bidding farewell to Mr. Lee D. Darrach, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Hector Darrach who has answered the call to service and is a member of the R.C.A.F. Mr. Darrach has been a prominent school teacher and has taught in his own home school for almost five years. Some nine months ago he accepted a position at the soldier training camp at Bench Grove Inn near Charlottetown where he successfully carried on until his call to the R. C. A. F., a short time ago. When the crowd assembled Mr. Edward MacPhail very capably acted as chairman and in a few well chosen words expressed the object of the gathering then called on Miss Hazel MacLean to read an address while Mr. Calvin Hyde on behalf of those present presented Mr. Darrach with a very substantial purse of money testifying to the high esteem in which he was held. Mr. Darrach in his general good manner, responded very fittingly, thanking all for their thoughtfulness. After singing "for he's a jolly good fellow" and the National Anthem, he was bounced to the ceiling. Lunch was then served by the ladies present and the remainder of the evening was spent in music and social intercourse, music being furnished by Charlie MacKinnon and Francis Doyle of Cornwall. At a late hour all wished their way homeward after wishing Mr. Darrach every good and the best of luck in his new duties. (Patriot Please Copy).

Huge British Storage depot Is eighth wonder

SOMEWHERE IN ENGLAND. Oct. 28—(CP)—Out of giant stone quarries 100 feet underground engineers have carved Britain's greatest ammunition storage depot—an arsenal described by one high-ranking officer as "the eighth wonder of the world."

It has nine miles of avenues and bays, stacked high with bombs, shells, boxes of TNT and cordite and cases of smaller ammunition.

Into this secret reservoir pour the products of munition factories of Britain, Canada and the United States.

They are stored here under 70 to 100 feet of rock, impervious to bombs, until they are required on a widespread fighting front.

This enormous arsenal is equipped with underground railways and sidings, connected directly to the main-line railway, miles of conveyor belts, underground power stations, emergency military headquarters, telephone exchange, barracks, canteens and an air-conditioning plant.

Long before the war broke out, military authorities realized plans must be made to store huge quantities of explosives out of reach of bombs. This place was chosen after an exhaustive survey carried out in 1934-35.

The project started in 1936 with removal of 1,000,000 tons of rubble leaving great underground galleries supported by pillars of stone. Acres of stone floor were laid in concrete. Pillars were reinforced with cement and a network of steel girders.

The cost was $9,000,000 an acre. In one section divided into walled-up compartments it ran to $225,000 an acre.

The arsenal is still being extended until it can store and handle 225,000 tons of ammunition.

Crimean Peninsula Saw many battles In other wars

(By The Canadian Press) The diamond-shaped Crimean Peninsula, a fortress-guarded port of Sevastopol, whose long, deep harbor could accommodate the massed warfleets of Europe, give whoever holds its mountain-graves a commanding position for naval control of the Black Sea.

Far swifter than the province of New Brunswick, the peninsula is linked to the Russian mainland by the four-mile wide Perekop Isthmus, and just more than one third of the way across from the north shores of the Black Sea toward Asiatic Turkey.

Most of its 750,000 population normally engage in fishing and farming—with wheat, the chief crop—but iron mines and oil refineries have been developed since 1927, when the Crimea became an autonomous Soviet republic.

A long railway linking Sevastopol with the Russian mainland boomed the port city of the southwestern coast of the peninsula from the ruins of the Crimean War of 1853 to 1855 to a modern city of 80,000 population, and a major Soviet naval base. Feodosiya and Kerch, on the southeast coast, are the other Crimean seaports and Simferopol, inland on the Sevastopol rail line, is the capital.

Passive mountains rise to 4,500 feet along the southern shore where the old Taurida district of Czarist Russia became a rest resort for Soviet workers.

It was a battleground in the Crimean War between 1853 and 1856 when Britain and France aided for the first time in two centuries, fought alongside the Turks against the troops of Czar Nicholas I and his successor Czar Alexander II.

The allied Russian expedition, put into the field to keep Russia from extending her grasp over Turkey and into the Balkans, landed on the Crimean coast and put Sevastopol under siege in the fall of 1854.

That siege lasted 11 months, and embraced the storied change of the night brigade on Sevastopol, the south of Sevastopol and the rigorous winter of 1854-55 when Florence Nightingale and her small staff of nurses tended the wounded to the wrecked seaport Sept. 11, 1855, the war was both ended and in the treaty of Paris Russia gave up her protectorate over the Danubian principalities.

Sevastopol, which the Russians had named "The August City," lost its fortifications, but the Russians rebuilt them later during the Franco-Prussian war.

During the Red revolution from 1917 to 1920 the Crimea again was a centre of fighting with the peninsula alternately under control of counter-revolutionary armies and Bolsheviks.

up the leads which come to us." O'Connor disputed Maloney's statement that Hill had not told the grand jury where he got the $12,000 and added that "it never came from the German government."

(At New York, Fish said the lawyer probably meant to convey, by his remarks in court, that "Hill's indictment was part of the smear campaign against me."

"I will say," Fish said, "that George Hill is 100 per cent ok, and I'll back George Hill to the limit on anything."

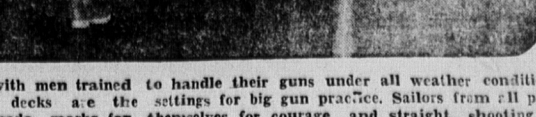

The indictment was in two counts and covered 27 pages. It recalled that the grand jury had been investigating the activities of Viereck and others. "The investigation concerned, I said, the manner in which the make-Europe-pay-war debts, islands-for-war-war-debts and war-debts defence committees; Prescott Dennett, secretary-treasurer of those committees; Hill and others had obtained possession of large quantities of franked envelopes and reprints from the congressional records; who paid for the reprints; whether Viereck, Dennett and Hill had written speeches which were printed in the record; whether Viereck had paid Hill to place orders with the government printing office for reprints from the record; and who had directed the removal of mail sacks from Dennett's home to

"The Key Man" "He is the key man here in Washington," Maloney said, "in the distribution through the mail and under government frank of propagandistic literature master-minded by foreign agents."

"That is something I take vigorous exception to," Maloney replied. "There is no desire in the department of justice to involve congressman Fish or any other congressman."

"The whole thing centred in congressman Fish's office and here is the key man. The fact that all this took place in congressman Fish's office is his misfortune. It certainly is not our fault that we follow

Quiet settles In N. S. after Election fever

HALIFAX, Oct. 28—(CP)—Bathed with a new mandate from the electorate, Nova Scotia's administration returned to the ordinary business of government today after a brief general election campaign and prepared to consider new financial arrangements with Ottawa and the calling of a special legislative session.

Premier A. S. MacMillan, whose Liberal party retained a majority of the 30 House seats in yesterday's voting, said the cabinet would meet tomorrow to deal with the accumulation of work piled up during the campaign. It might be necessary to call the House into session later, he said, to ratify whatever arrangements are made with Ottawa in respect to a new agreement on taxation matters.

He had indicated earlier the province might hand over to the Dominion "all right to collect income and corporation taxes for the duration of the war."

Meanwhile, final election figures were still incomplete tonight but indications were that the vote was considerably lighter than in 1937.

With 12 civilian and 11 servicemen's polls lacking, an unofficial Canadian Press compilation gave the Liberals 136,776 votes; the Conservatives 106,668 and the C. P. 18,283, a total of 201,697.

In the double ridings of Lunenburg, Pictou, Cumberland and Colchester, 53,000 persons cast two votes apiece for a total of 106,000 bringing the total number of actual voters to about 228,000. Eligible voters numbered 325,000.

In the 1937 election, 249,000 cast ballots out of an eligible total of nearly 313,000. Liberals received 155,000 votes, the Conservatives 143,000 and the lone Labor candidate 3,996. More than 312,000 votes were cast.

The Liberal government won 23 of the Legislature's seats in the voting. Conservatives took four and the C.C.P. three.

Civilian polls missing today were in remote parts of the province, most of them in Cape Breton Island. Their ballots in no cases could sway the verdict.

Provincial officials have received results from 20 of the 31 polls set up to take the vote of servicemen. Of the 3,735 men in "isolated sectors" and doubt was expressed that the results would be known here before tomorrow and possibly later.

Queen's appeared to be the chief constituency in which the remaining soldier vote might work a change. Complete civilian returns and the partial result of the servicemen's vote gave Liberal H. D. Madden only 19 more votes than Conservative J. J. Cameron, a member of the last House.

Madden had 2,450 compared with Cameron's 2,440. Only six of those votes—four for Cameron—were put into the boxes by servicemen, however, so the result of the last 11 polls would have to be much heavier than the first 20 to cause a change.
