South of Stalingrad other German tank formations had driven another wedge into the Russian lines.

The grim truth we have to realize is that if our partnership in this war is not successful, we and all our other partners face utter ruin, with no chance of a composition or arrangement, and a future under the horrors of merciless slavery—nothing less.
The enemy would be a long one. Three years had stretched out—and we had not started to win yet.
Morale must be maintained, for it might be that "the last dread-ful round the deciding factor will not be manpower and weapons but the state of mind and spirit of the opposing peoples.
