Trinity United Church Observes 80th Anniversary

By J. F. Wear

On the 13th of November, 1944, the present building known now as Trinity United Church was dedicated to the worship of Almighty God. The corner stone of the edifice had been laid a year and a half earlier by Mrs. Dundas, the Lady of His Excellency, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province. The structure is 115 feet long by 68 feet wide and 42 feet high to the eaves. The pews on the main floor and in the gallery have seating accommodation for 1550 persons.

Improvements and changes were made to the interior of the Church in 1907, but the seating capacity was very little changed and it required to accommodate the large congregation which now looks to Trinity for spiritual guidance, and which, according to latest records, now numbers fully 3,100 persons.

The erection and dedication of this building eighty years ago is a monument to the religious fervor of our predecessors at such an early stage in our City's history, and is fitting that as the years follow each other this Anniversary should be observed in commemoration of the event. The membership of that day included men of vision, men of faith, men eager to "give heart and soul and mind and strength to serve the King of Kings." They were the successors of a long list of godly and devoted men whose memories are cherished and whose works follow after them.

Converts Of Wesley

Trinity Church is now a unit in "The United Church of Canada." The membership rejoices in the fact that this union and its loyalty to its principles, but the pioneers of the religious movement which culminated in the building of this Church were converts of John Wesley.

In the autumn of 1774 a large number of emigrants from London, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Chappell, arrived on the north side of the Island and gave the name "New London" to the surrounding country. They established the village of Elizabethtown on the west side of the entrance to the harbour. Not a vestige of this village now remains except the burial ground.

The village had a population of 129 in the winter of 1774-5.

Mr. and Mrs. Chappell removed to Charlottetown in October 1778, and started holding prayer meetings in their own house, and upon Mr. Chappell's earnest solicitation Rev. William Black of Nova Scotia, visited here October 22, 1783 and tarried about a fortnight.

In the spring of 1792 a Rev. Mr. Grandin of Nova Scotia made a visit here and held services both here and at Tryon after which a society class was formed. Rev. Mr. Black made a second visit in the autumn of 1794 which is said to have been productive of great good. Mr. Thomas Dawson, a Methodist local preacher arrived here on 6th June, 1801 and on 15th May, 1806, seventy-three men, women, and children arrived from the Island of Guernsey. They were all Methodists among whom was Rev. Avaris, a local preacher, who preached his first sermon on Sunday, 18th May, 1806. His text being "I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord."

Early Services

Services were held in the Court House with the permission of Governor Fanning, and through Mr. Avaris's influence a regular preacher from London was appointed in the person of Rev. James Sulphit, who started his ministry on 8th August, 1807. He was followed by Rev. John Hicks in 1815 and the line of ministers has been continuous since 1807. Thus it is seen from the cottage prayer meeting, classes were formed, a society was organized, and churches were erected to keep abreast of the growing congregations. It was, therefore, quite natural that in 1825 the largest following of the United Church of Canada was welcomed and eagerly embraced.

Here is an extract from a letter written by Rev. Mr. Hicks in 1816. "We have in Charlottetown a member in Society by the name of Benjamin Chappell, mentioned with respect by Wesley in the fourth volume of his journals, page 430, and with whom without his knowledge or consent when his parents were naturalized, was drafted into the American army. The rest follows. You have returned to the land of your birth, and can stay here now until you want to leave.

REV. T. E. McLEENAN, Pastor of Trinity United Church, who will conduct the 80th anniversary services on Sunday.

"I shall not want to leave, Jacoby."

"I hope not. But anyway, this makes you a German and at the same time takes care of your American accent. However, please listen to me and try to speak like me. Erich Kessler would have heard his parents speak German at home and would pronounce it better than you do."

"I do my best. Correct me whenever you please."

Jacoby nodded. While he sought for it, he said, "enough to die for." Whether the barrier was language or experience, this time Jacoby did not try to answer. But he went and did what Arthur had asked him to do.

CHAPTER VI

Jacoby used one of the precious night hours when he should have slept to rig up a sort of dictionary on his cot, and set the dictionary on it. "My English is so faulty, Kitt, and I have no time to improve it. Why do you not learn to talk to me?"

He read the first words aloud "him, slowly, so Arthur could be sure to learn their pronunciation. While he was taking a hasty supper of turnips and potatoes Jacoby jects in the room, writing their names beside them, and set the table for Arthur to study during the day. Arthur, writing for him. He was not yet able to finish his thoughts forward into the future. Jacoby was forcing upon him. This occupation was enough to keep his mind with German words to keep it from being filled with thoughts of Elizabeth. When Jacoby asked him to talk in simple sentences, roughly and in a childish delight when he understood him.

Long afterwards, when they were looking back on those days, Jacoby said to him, "You did not know how I was to be a man then." Arthur answered, "Maybe you never knew how often I nearly gave up. 'Yes, I do know," said Jacoby, "but you did not give up. That is what I mean, Kitt."

To the very end, Jacoby sometimes called him Kitt. If anyone asked why, he said, "Oh no, Herr Kessler's name is Erich. Calling him Kitt is an old habit of mine, from years back."

They were both so used to it that they generally forgot it. It was an abbreviation of his old name. The new name was provided by Jacoby after Arthur had been moved to the hospital in Berlin. While he was convalescing from another of the surgical operations Jacoby inquired upon him, "My name is very ill and Jacoby had given me a blood transfusion. When he was better and tried to express his thanks Jacoby, who was very grateful, said, 'My blood isn't good enough for gratitude. Kitt made of nothing but turnips and a carrot and two. I have something else for you, more important.' He produced a document, offering with an air of triumph. "Here is your birth certificate."

Arthur laughed at that. Birth certificates had not been important in the United States before the war. He had never had one. But Jacoby was a German, and thought like a German, and to him his beloved Kitt's physical welfare was no more essential than the records which the Germans demanded even in their most chaotic days. Jacoby explained, "Listen carefully, Kitt. From now on your name is Erich Kessler. I have lost sleep over wondering how you could identify yourself, until one morning about three o'clock I found the solution. When I was a child, my parents knew a couple named Kessler. They had lived in a town called—'Yes, I know, it was called—'Milwaukee. You have heard of it?"

Arthur nodded. "Yes, I grew up in a town called Chicago. They are very near each other."

"Frequently."

"That is good. While he was still a small child, Erich Kessler died. I know that, because his mother and mine used to correspond. But there is no official record of that in this country, because the Kesslers stayed in the United States and were naturalized. For all I know they may be there to this day."

"Making beer, perhaps?"

"Why? Do you know them?"

"Never heard of them. But I know Milwaukee. Go on, Jacoby."

Arthur had obtained Erich Kessler's birth certificate. It was recorded that Erich—yes—naturalized

What causes NEURITIS?

Like many other complaints, the cause may be simply lack of vitamins in the daily diet.

Mary Williams, according to modern science, are not due to organic trouble, but to shortage of vitamins. At first, it was thought that lack of vitamin B1 was the cause of neuritis suffering. Now we know that all 8 vitamins are necessary, because each aids the other to function. You can now get them combined in "ALL-IN-ONE" Vitamin how much better you feel.
