Man Who Controls Loews Theatres

Perhaps Marcus Loew has a better right to be called the greatest theatrical magnate in the world than any other man, though the title has been frequently bestowed on others. We doubt if there is any other man who owns or controls 127 theatres. Not only that, but in the next two months he expects to open a new theatre each week, one of them being in Montreal. He has made a prodigious success of the business, starting on the proverbial shoestring, and now being able to command whatever millions he needs. His new theatre in New York, on the corner of Broadway and Forty-Fifth Street, cost $6,000,000, and is the biggest of its kind. It seems likely that before Mr Loew dies, if he continues at the present rate, he will have at least one theatre in every important centre in the United States and Canada. Most of his theatres are movies. Some present vaudeville. Others combine the two. He makes a study of his neighborhood, he says, before he decides on what kind of theatre he is to operate.

Working at Six Years. The outline of his career, as told recently in an interview for the New York Times, is an interesting one. He went to work when he was six years old and when, one assumes, the school laws in New York were easily evaded. He was a newsboy and acquired some way or other the privilege of selling papers in front of McGlory's notorious resort at Hester Street and the Bowery in the early morning hours. He did considerable business, for when McGlory's patrons left the place they required a copious supply of newspapers to settle bets as to what day it was. So Little Marcus prospered. He says that he was not actually obliged to work, thus early in life, for while his people were poor, they were by no means paupers, but he had an ambition to do something for himself. For three years he toiled in front of McGlory's from two a. m. to four a. m. and put by a few dollars. He came to the conclusion that he ought to learn a trade, and with this end in view, got a job in a mapeolur plant.

He was paid 35c a day, and presently cultivated the idea that he was worth 40, in pursuance of which he went on strike. Next, he went into partnership with a printer, and they started a little newspaper which would be thrown in doorways, and carried neighborhood advertising. This also blew up. Then he went into the fur business, first as a salesman, and when he had $50 to invest as a proprietor. This might have proved a lucrative business but for the fact that his foreman stole most of his fur and he went bankrupt, eventually paying all his creditors. The next ten or fifteen years were spent on various jobs, but we later for that the thrifty Mr Loew was able to save a little. He had also the good fortune to make a friend of David Warfield, and it was at Warfield's advice that he went in to the amusement business. He was then thirty-five years old.

The Early Movies. His first venture was a penny arcade in New York—old-fashioned "moving pictures", graphophones, and so forth. He made money and set up several of these places. The luckiest thing that ever happened to him was when he went to Cincinnati and opened a penny arcade, for that resulted in him making the acquaintance of a house painter in Covington, Kentucky, who had opened a sort of moving picture place there. The house had been a private residence and the seats were packing cases. This painter got his own tickets and operated his own machine. He would deliver lectures. As an additional attraction, he had a man who gave performances in leger-main when required. The painter was making money, too, and from him Loew got the idea that made his own fortune.

Fortune Smiles. He went back to Cincinnati and proceeded to turn his penny arcade into a moving picture house. At first he covered only a part of the premises: the new venture and hired the camp chairs from an undertaker. The first day he had nearly 5,000 people. It was the first movie in Cincinnati, and the admission fee was only five cents. The pictures, we may be sure, were terrible, but they were new, and the business Loew did in his 110 seats was as much as some big theatres are doing today. Loew went back to New York and turned his penny arcades into moving picture houses. They succeeded as swiftly as his Cincinnati houses, and with his profits he secured leases on other premises, being one of the earliest in the field to see the prospects of building theatres exclusively to the movies, and not regarding the pictures as merely an added attraction to a vaudeville performance. Mr Loew is only fifty-one years old now, and has been sixteen years in the movies.

FOOD DELIGHT FROM A LAND OF PLENTY.

By A. L. Wyman, M.C.A.

We have just completed a trip through the richest agricultural and manufacturing section of this state and we were served many good and wholesome meals at the hotels and wayside inns in the towns that we visited, meals that will always be remembered for the beautiful service of fresh fruits, vegetables, poultry, the best ham and bacon, home cured, and dairy dishes that we have ever tasted.

In the Cumberland valley, just outside of Carlisle, we stopped for dinner at an old time tavern and the salad of green vegetables was served with a dressing that was so good we asked the proprietor if we could interview the cook and secure the recipe. The cook was his wife, and she very gladly gave the recipe and some others that were favorites of hers.

Honey Salad Dressing.

The salad dressing was made by beating an egg with two table-spoons of honey until smooth, place in a saucepan and stir in one-quarter of a teaspoon of mustard, half a teaspoon of salt, quarter teaspoon of paprika, and half a cup of lemon juice, stir over a slow fire until the mixture reaches the boiling point. Remove from the fire and stir until cold. Add one cup of whipped cream. Good for all vegetable and fruit salads.

Buttermilk Cakes.

For her hot cakes she uses two cups of sifted flour mixed with one cup of corn meal, one teaspoon of soda, the well beaten yolks of three eggs and enough buttermilk to make a rather stiff batter. Beat the batter until smooth and add the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs. Use a well greased spoon to pour onto a hot well greased griddle. Bake to a nice brown on both sides and serve with maple syrup.

OLD FASHIONED MARBLE CAKE

For dinner she served an old fashioned marble cake with a dish of fresh peaches covered with whipped cream. For the cake beat to a cream three-quarters of a cup of butter and one and a half cups of sugar, add three well beaten eggs and three cups of flour sifted with four teaspoons of baking powder and a quarter of a teaspoon of salt. Add one cup of rich milk beat smooth and flavor with one teaspoon of vanilla extract. Remove to another bowl one-half of the batter and to this add one tablespoon of molasses, one tablespoon of melted chocolate, one cup of chopped seeded raisins and half a teaspoon of ground mace. Drop by spoonfuls into a deep, greased and floured cake pan, alternating the two batters. Bake forty-five minutes in a moderate oven. Frost with a white icing to which add some chopped nut meats and seedless raisins.

Quick Fruit Bread.

The cook also makes a very nice soda fruit bread by mixing three cups of graham flour with one cup of chopped walnut meats, one cup of chopped seeded raisins, three-quarters of a cup of brown sugar, half a teaspoon of salt, and one and a half cups of sour milk mixed with one teaspoon of baking soda. When well mixed place in a bread pan and bake in a moderate oven fifty minutes.

Austin Dobson (Toronto Globe)

The death of Austin Dobson deprives English literature of a rare and delicate artist. Within the narrow limits which he imposed on himself, he was a master craftsman. His was not a brody canvas or a large brush. His work had the exquisite quality of miniature painting. He has been called the present-day poet of the eighteenth century, the decorative features of that period, its pagantry and ceremony, appealing to his peculiar talents. Many of his best poems are vignettes of the France of the old regime. He could write lovely verse on so trifling a theme as the fan of the Marquise de Pompadour. Much of his work was brocade, but it was beautiful brocade. He was neither wide nor deep, but he had a virtuoso-like touch akin to genius. The poet made no idle boast in these stanzas: "In after days when grasses high O'er top the stone where I shall die; Though ill or well the world ad-just

My slender claim to honour'd dust I shall not question or reply. I shall not see the morning sky; I shall not hear the night-wind sigh; I shall be nuts, as all men must. In after days That someone then should testify Saying—He held his pen in trust To Art, not serving shame or lust Will none?—Then let my memory die. In after days! This poem may well be his epitaph.

Advertisement for ENTERPRISE PIPELESS FURNACE. Marconi Showed the Way—and Furnace Pipes Must Go. MARCONI showed that sound waves could be carried through the air—that wires were unnecessary. The modern heating engineer has shown that HEAT CAN BE CARRIED THROUGH THE AIR—that PIPES ARE UNNECESSARY. With the entire heating system IN THE CELLAR, out of sight and out of the way—WITHOUT A PIPE through floor or wall, to clutter the home and mar its beauty—WITH NOTHING at all in the house but the warm heat, you can have EVERY individual room at a PERFECTLY EVEN TEMPERATURE, and that temperature exactly what you want it. Pipeless Heating makes your home a snug and cosy nest of comfort. The Pipeless way is NATURE'S WAY. Stiffness is unknown. All while the air is circulating—coming and going on its rounds. Although its motion cannot be felt, it is travelling from room to room, CIRCULATING THROUGHOUT THE ENTIRE HOUSE, making its way back to the furnace to be cleaned by heat, washed, moistened and re-warmed. The Enterprise Pipeless Furnace does the work of THREE OR FOUR STOVES with HALF THE FUEL, and a fraction of the labor—rids the home of dirt and dust, gives you an ALL-WARM HOUSE and a COOL CELLAR, suitable for storing fruit and vegetables. The Enterprise Pipeless burns ANY KIND OF FUEL, and so much less of it, that in a short while it will give you back in reduced fuel bills its entire initial cost. Its installation is simplicity itself—A SINGLE DAY is all it takes to put it in—a hole is cut to fit the register, the furnace is set up and lighted. ENTERPRISE PIPELESS FURNACE.
