THE UNDISTURBED STARS

It came as quite a refreshing relief to the privileged few who are admitted annually within the jealously guarded precincts of the Royal Observatory to realize that there were still patiently and passionately absorbed watchers here with thoughts of other things than war.
Some idea of the immensity of the work of the Observatory was given by the report of the Astronomer Royal, Mr. F. W. Dyson, for the year ending May 10, 1915. Mr. Dawson announced that the catalogue of the Observatory contained no less than 12,400 stars, of which most have been observed at least five times.
The Astronomer Royal also referred to the expedition sent to Russia to observe the total solar eclipse of August 20 last. "The party proceeded to a station near Minsk," he explained, "and the eclipse was observed under good atmospheric conditions. Owing to the outbreak of war, it was impossible for the observers to bring back the instruments with them, and will do neither are unworthy the liberties they enjoy, for which men by the thousands are dying.

After all, this great cloud has a silver lining. It may lead those of us who inherited privileges we little prized, to hold them hereafter in higher estimation, and to exercise the rights of self-government with greater unselfishness and purer ideals. If this be accomplished, the sacrifice will not have been in vain.

THE QUIET HARBOR.
(Caroline Russell Bispham, in New York Times.)
"No harbor is so sheltered but that the ship of death may sail in."—Old Scotch Proverb.

Far, far away I just can see
A little boat sail toward the quay.
What does it bring—whose can it be?
It looks so small across the sea,
The cold north-sea that runs, ah, me,
Between my soldier-love and me.

I see it now beyond the lea,
Now near, now far, it seems to be—
Perhaps it brings my destiny;
Perchance it bears the mystic key
That unlocks pain or joy for me,
Oh, bring me joy, not pain—woe's
me.

Nor maid, nor maid e'er loved as we!
As swift as death may sail in—
They hail us—Jamie, where are ye?
And Jack, run quick, here's twice yer fee.

If ye bring good news to me—
Look, look! they wave—they call for
me!
They stand with bare heads by the sea!
They've heard bad news what can it be?

Oh, for winged feet that I might flee
As swift as sight across the lea
To see what they have brought to me!
They laid it at the feet of me
Upon the gray sands of the lea.
The long black box that came by sea,
And I cried in my agony—
"God, God, explain the mystery Of Death!" . . . But silence answered me,

When they brought back my love to
me—
Brought my dead soldier home to me!

These were therefore left with at the Poulkova Observatory.
The object of chief interest among the privileged visitors was naturally the giant 28-inch reflector, which is mainly used for the observation of double stars. The superb structure of steel which supports the great telescope, and which is as delicate as it is strong, has not required strengthening since it was first erected in 1850, though then the instrument it bore was only 13 inches in diameter.
Among those engaged on this telescope, it is interesting to record, is no less a person than M. Jonckheere, the director of the famous observatory at Lille. M. Jonckheere, who, during the eight months he has been at Greenwich, has discovered no less than 60
