Selwood Of Sleepy Cat

He threw open the door into the gambling-room. The lights were on—not a soul was in sight. But signs of disorder and evidence of hasty departure were everywhere. Glancing collectedly about drawing rapid inferences from whatever he saw, Selwood looked at his watch. It lacked but a minute of twelve o'clock—perhaps the Vigilantes were coming back to face his threat and finish him and the hall together.

Puzzled at the situation, Selwood strode down the broad steps and started for the horse barn. He noticed that the barn lights were burning, particularly the stationary lanterns on both sides of the front door. At the moment he approached the front of the barn, in the shadow of its side a masked man, apparently a Vigilante, hurrying up the street, encountered a man running out of the barn itself.

The Vigilante, evidently a man of great strength, staggered, but grappled with his enemy, only to receive a second blow that would have felled any but the strongest. The handkerchief, symbol of the raiding party, slipped from his face to his neck, but, dazed as he was, he clinched with his assailant and struggled with him. Selwood, little as he liked the red handkerchief, liked a game fighter, and watched the struggle the dazed man was making against one evidently no better than a cowardly murderer.

It was too much to watch a murderer, Selwood, with an indignant oath, took a quick step forward. The Vigilante was under, and, as he was rolled on his back, the gambler recognized Abe Cole, the blacksmith; at the same instant he saw the knife raised above him. Selwood, with a vicious kick, sent the knife hurtling across the driveway, and grabbing the upper man by the collar, brought the butt of his gun down on the man's head and turned his face to the light to see who it was.

"Where are your hostlers?" demanded Selwood, upset. "Out with them dashed Vigilantes—couldn't hold 'em back—not a man-Jack of 'em. Lefever's got his teamsters over in the warehouse and the bunkhouse." The gambler hardly heard the answer. A panic had seized him. Too late he realized the danger to which Christie had been exposed—the danger to which he had left her.

The lamp was hot. The blaze scorched Selwood's eyes as he looked into it. He lifted the bowl carefully out of the frame and balanced it. Once more he looked about him. Then drawing back, he hurried the burning lamp with both hands far across the floor.

ONE MILLION OWNERS Now Recommend the "GENERAL ELECTRIC"

FOUR years ago the General Electric Refrigerator was unknown. Today there are more than 1,000,000 satisfied owners. This record-breaking achievement has been made possible by the mechanism of the General Electric which is mounted on top of the cabinet—where it ought to be. It is hermetically sealed—simple, quiet, self-oiled—fortified forever against air, dirt, moisture and tinkering.

ALL-STEEL CABINET - Built like a safe to last a lifetime. Thick airtight doors keep cold in - lock heat out. SANITARY CHILLING CHAMBER - As easily cleaned as a china plate. MULTI-TEMPERATURE - Three zones of cold essential to good refrigeration. (1) Super-freezer for fast freezing. (2) Chiller for cold storage of salads and pastries. (3) Even, dry temperature of cabinet, always below 50 degrees.
