Mr. Foley was born in Waterford Prince County, son of the late Thomas Foley and Mary Shea Foley. For many years, James, with three other brothers operated a lobster factory for the late R. T. Holman at Waterford, but when the lobster business went down the brothers removed to British Columbia.

Mr. Foley was associated with the early days of Vancouver and for many years was manage at the mines at Slocan City, B. C.

The following is clipped from the Vancouver News Herald of Dec. 15th and will be of interest to Islanders:

"One of Vancouver's oldest pioneers, James B. Foley, who came to the Pacific Coast in 1887, died at the age of 76 years on Thursday, at 853 East Pender Street.

"Native of Prince Edward Island, he was for many years connected with the steamboat traffic on the coast. He had recently returned from holidaying in California.

ELMSDALE

The following students are spending their Christmas holidays at their respective homes in Elmsdale: Mr. Alan McLeod, Mr. Willard O'Brien, Miss Noreen O'Brien, Miss Lois O'Brien.

His many friends in Elmsdale are pleased to have with them for a brief holiday Mr. George Johnston, who has been in St. John for the past few months.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Rennie have returned from Boston, where Mrs. Rennie was receiving medical treatment. All are pleased to know that Mrs. Rennie's health has improved.

Miss Eleanor O'Brien, who has been attending Tignish Convent, has arrived home to spend the Christmas season with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. O'Brien.

Mr. Winston Currie, teacher, of Glenwood School, arrived in the City Friday night, where he and his friends, Mr. John Matthews, Mr. Ralph Wells, and our good old sport, Mr. Fraser Wells, are delightfully entertaining their many friends with their music, both vocal and instrumental.

We are pleased to hear that Mrs. Frank McKenna is convalescing. She was attended during her illness by our capable community nurse, Mrs. Bruce Currie.

Mr. Urban MacKinnon, who has been attending Elmsdale School, left Saturday morning for his home in Grand River.

Our merchants, Mr. A. L. Rennie and Mr. J. A. Callaghan, did a rushing business during the Christmas season. By the number of "green backs" handled, one might wonder if the "depression" has yet reached the vicinity of Elmsdale.

Our genial postmistress, Mrs. Hazel Cameron, has had a strenuous time during the holiday season owing to the large mail received. Despite her arduous duties, Mrs. Cameron, however, is always willing to give, when office hours are over, of her talent as a pianist for the pleasure of her friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Ronald McKenna and family are spending Christmas in Summerside, the guests of Mrs. McKenna's mother, Mrs. Cameron.

Mr. Kenneth Matthews has recently moved into his commodious new home in Elmsdale.

The schools of Elmsdale and vicinity have closed for their holidays. The closings of Elmsdale, Rosebank, and Alma Schools were accompanied by well-prepared programmes. The teachers were pleased to see a large attendance showing the co-operation of the parents, without which success cannot be attained.

Miss Linda Hardy, teacher of the primary room of Elmsdale School, is spending her holidays at her home in Kensington.

Mr. Leonard Williams is to be congratulated on the manner in which he is relieving Mr. McNeill of his duties as mail-driver. The latter has been a patient in Prince County Hospital.

Mrs. John Gordon, Mrs. Arthur Matthews, Mrs. Hazel Cameron, Mr. Ervin Ramsay, and Mr. Heber Hardy were in Summerside lately, disposing of some valuable fox pelts.

ONE POSSIBLE REASON

The manager of the travelling concert party gazed glumly at the audience—five, all told.

I say, old man, he whispered to the comedian, how do you account for this? We've never been here before, have we?

ENVIRONMENT CHANGED BY PROHIBITION

Fisherfolk On Island of St. Pierre Have Forgotten Art of Fishing.

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

ST. PIERRE, Miq., Jan. 1—The fishermen of St. Pierre have forgotten how to fish.

That's the strange heritage that prohibition has left the people of this tiny island, centre of the Atlantic's great rum-running trade in the days when dry America was calling for—and getting—illegal liquor to quench its post-war thirst.

The story of how a people abandoned one of man's oldest callings is a short one; it's the story of easy money. St. Pierre's fisherfolk found it in prohibition

For nearly three centuries they had been content to follow the industry of the ancestors who followed Jacques Cartier across an ocean. There was little to do here but fish; and that they did, content to live simply.

Then the dry era began. Thirsty Canadians and United States citizens must have their liquor, legal or otherwise. St. Pierre, where the law didn't care much whence it came or where it went so long as the duties were paid, became a transfer station almost overnight for a huge liquor traffic.

And almost overnight life changed for the fisherfolk of St. Pierre. It was easier, and it paid more, to handle liquor on shore than to toil at the fishery. Fishermen gave up their back-breaking work on smelly smacks to live well on land at this new calling.

This went on for more than a decade, the colony and its people waxing prosperous, built new roads and other improvements, and expensive new harbor equipment for the sleek rum-running ships to come and go more easily.

Then came repeal in the United States. In St. Pierre the folk for the first time in 14 years had to go back to the fishery.

But they didn't want to fish. They had lost their taste for it during years of opulence; the older ones, that is. As for the post-war generation, it had never bothered to learn the art.

Government offers of free gear and a bounty failed to lure many back to sea. Those who did go out last year came back with poor catches. Somehow, they couldn't bring the cod in as they used to and earnings were not enough to support families.

This winter, the government is handing out relief for the first time in memory. In the spring, that will end, and the men will go out to the banks once more. Perhaps the fishery will be good; and soon, perhaps, their halycon days over, they will resume the normal environment of pre prohibition days.

JEALOUS ANTONIO

(By John W. Garvin)

Antonio, a valiant son
Of Italy and ancient Rome,
Had crossed the ocean with his bride
To found a new and happy home.

Canada was his journey's end—
A small fruit store had he to start,
And Lisa served the customers
While he was absent with the cart.

The bride was young, and lovely too,
With voice of music, lustrous eyes,
And grace in every move she made—
No man her beauty could despise.

They thrived apace and money saved,
And soon had larger store to suit,
With vegetables and groceries
And many kinds of luscious fruit.

The cart was sold. Antonio
Served customers within the store
And soon he noticed many men
Were entering the open door.

To buy from Lisa, not from him.
He also noticed she had had smiles
And bright remarks for each of them
While parcelling, arranging piles.

That night he harshly spoke to her:
"How dare you flirt with other men!
You try to make me jealous, eh?
I sharpen up my knife and then—

You better mind, Antonio;
I will not share you—nevermore—
Henceforth you serve in house alone,
I hire helper for the store."

With angry glare and scornful lip,
She told him he was but a brute
To make her life a drudgery
Instead of mellowing with the fruit.

To Mussolini she would write,
Or to the Black Hand secrets tell;
And he would find a loving wife
Was better than a living hell.

He felt alarm, but braced it out—
His knife took on a keener edge—
Till one day came a Black Hand note
That split his courage like a wedge.

Until he read it over twice.
It ordered him, a thousand pay
Within a week, or they would kill
His wife adored, without delay.

He wrote them back and frankly said
He could not meet their cash decree;

But he was pleased to let them know
He liked their threatened penalty.

FORTY-SIX PER CENT OF ITALIAN PEOPLE DERIVE LIVING FROM THE SOIL

Italy is essentially an agricultural country, forty-six per cent of the workmen deriving a living from the soil and hence the desire of the Government to increase the production of wheat, according to the Agricultural Department of the Canadian National Railways. The Italian climate is not well adapted to wheat growing and, in addition, the soil has deteriorated in quality. The Government authorities are working towards developing an early ripening variety of wheat and selecting a suitable crop for planting during the same year on the same land after the wheat crop has been harvested. A disease known as "Blast" affects Italian wheat, particularly that grown in the south, the kernels becoming shrivelled and stunted. The disease is caused by the sun's heat early in the season and hence the desire of the Government to produce a wheat that will be sufficiently mature to withstand the suddenly increased heat of the sun in May. Durum wheats are produced almost exclusively in the southern part of Italy and on the islands of Sardinia and Sicily, the most productive areas being in Sicily. Bread wheats are produced in all of the Italian provinces but the area of greatest productivity is the Po River valley in Northern Italy. Canadian wheat, particularly the Manitoba variety, is preferred by Italian millers for blending purposes and on account of the greater gluten content they are willing to pay a higher price for it.

QUEEN RECEIVES CASKET OF TEA

LONDON, Jan. 3—(By Canadian Press)—This year is the centenary of the tea-growing industry in the British Empire, and the tea-producers of the Empire have celebrated it by presenting to the Queen a casket holding 15 pounds of tea. The casket itself is a lovely thing, made of Bombay rosewood inlaid with Ceylon satinwood and ebony, and the tea inside is unique. It is blended from 16 of the finest known teas, seven from Ceylon, six from India and two from East Africa.

One of the components of this rare mixture is a tea from DarJeeling, which looks more like tobacco than tea, and is described as having a "very fine muscatel flavor." It is probably the most expensive tea in the world, $3.25 a pound, and is used in minute quantities for flavoring teas of humbler vintage.

Eskimos Cannot Give "Good-Bye"

(By The Canadian Press)

MONTREAL, Jan. 3—"Really very charming people," was the comment on Eskimos made by Mrs. James A. Urquahart of Aklavik, during an interview here. Having travelled by dog team, schooner or aeroplane with her husband, who is the only physician along 1,400 miles of the Arctic, Mrs. Urquahart is a familiar figure in the Indian and Eskimo camps along the route. She has had plenty of opportunity to study the people and their ways.

When on the trail Mrs. Urquahart adopts the Eskimo mode of dress. "I think our fur outfits would be worth money in the shops here," she admitted. 'I have a parka (coat with a hood to cover the head) of reindeer skin. My mitts are of lynx trimmed with wolverine. Then I've another pair of mitts made from mountain sheepskin and my really favorite parka is of Siberian rabbit which has been traded across the Bering Straits."

Mrs. Urquahart described the last as a very beautiful fur, white with flecks of black. She spoke also of many pairs of hair seal boots received as presents from Eskimo friends, house boots with thin soles of whitefish skin and waterproof ones for outdoor wear. "Do you know", she added, "that you can stand for hours in water in a pair of Eskimo sinew-sewn boots and stay perfectly dry?"

Mrs. Urquahart admitted some difficulty in learning to eat the food in the camps she visited. Now, however, she loves to eat fat meat. She has tried frozen raw fish, known as "quokk" fish, and found it not too bad, though "quokk" meat is still a bit too much for her.

When the Eskimos go to Aklavik for supplies the Urquahart home is one of their first stopping places. Asked about her duties as an Eskimo hostess, Mrs. Urquahart replied, "Why—we give them a cigarette and a cup of tea and we talk. Then, suddenly, they'll get up and go, without saying good-bye," Dr. Urquahart explained this was because their language contained no words for "good-day" and "good-bye."

Traced Wedding Of King Edward

(By The Canadian Press)

MANCHESTER, Jan. 3—"Marriage of the Princess," a short special broadcast programme devised by Kenneth Adams, brought such delighted comment on the eve of Princess Marina's wedding The Manchester Guardian says:

"This was a 'flashback' in extracts from diaries and newspapers of the time to the arrival and the wedding of Princess Alexandra of Denmark in 1863. (To Prince Edward, afterwards King Edward VII). Of its kind it was a perfect programme and one that should show everyone, even those most sceptical of broadcasting, how interesting and entertaining such things can be. For this reconstruction could not have been effective in any other medium; it depended upon the effect of the spoken word, and that effect was unquestionably successful.

"The programme started with forecasts from the contemporary papers of the coming engagement, and gave some descriptions of the Princess and her life in Denmark. Then from Queen Victoria's diary came extracts relating her first meeting with the Princess. All the extracts from the Queen's diaries were delightful; the precise vivid phrases sounded far more effective than when they are read to oneself. A speech in the House was produced with the echo effect, and there were rapid reports of festivities all over England, including a distribution of soup at Aberdeen.

"On the arrival of the Princess by boat one noticed many likenesses to the description of Princess Marina's arrival; there was Prince Edward standing upon the quay and his Princess standing at the rail of the boat, but there was one marked difference—Princess Alexandra was 'dressed all in white with a warm white shawl.'

"In fine crescendo the programme traced the progress through the city and the scene of pageantry at Windsor, where the wedding took place. In the chapel before the ceremony there was great surprise when 'Lord Palmerston took out a comb and combed his hoary whiskers.' More extracts from the Queen's diary told of her impressions and feelings, and the end was on a subdued reminiscent note after the bridal couple had gone.

"The four speakers were Kate Cutler, Nesta Sawyer, Ben Webster and Carleton Hobbs, and all caught the right tone exactly."

Hockin, of St. James United Church, Souris, of which the deceased was a faithful member. The hymns sung were favorite selections of the deceased. "Waiting and Watching", was feelingly rendered by her niece, Miss Gertrude Sterns.

E. LYNCH

A statement issued by the C. N. R. after its investigation into the wreck at Dundas, Ontario, which took 14 lives, blames the tragedy on Brakeman E. Lynch of Mimico, Ont., who the statement says mistakenly believing his train to be on the main line, and seeking to avoid a crash, threw the switch onto the siding as he saw the flyer approaching. This took place after Trainman Phelps had properly set the switch for the main line.
