Auction Sales

The Guardian Job Department is well equipped to turn out sale bills.

Any person having an Auction sale should advertise in both ways.

An advertisement may pay for itself if it brings only one more bidder to the sale.

The Charlottetown Guardian

TEN DOLLARS FOR SLOGAN

An interesting announcement has been made by Mr. P. W. Clarkin, Chairman of the Publicity Committee of the Tourist Association. A new brief slogan, suitable for use in advertising the Island is needed, and suggestions that will bring out some of the most attractive features of our Home Province are now looked for. A prize of $10.00 will be paid for the best slogan submitted.

To avoid confusion and unfairness, it is required that every slogan submitted, be written on white paper, size about 5 x 5 inches. No other marks or writing are to appear on the slogan paper except the slogan. The name and address of the sender should be written on the outside of the envelope with the words "Slogan Contest" and the envelope mailed to Harold Barnes, P. O. Box 477, Charlottetown, P. E. I. The envelopes will be opened in the presence of three members of the Publicity Committee, corresponding numbers assigned to each slogan and its envelope, and the slogans turned over to the judges. If slogan No—is judged the best, the correspondingly numbered envelope will give the name of the winner. A contestant may submit as many slogans as he or she wishes, but if possible, each slogan should not contain more than seven words.

All slogans must be received before March 15th.

This is an excellent opportunity for our readers to exercise their ingenuity of words, and also render valuable service in advertising the Island. The only conditions in addition to the above are that every slogan shall become the property of the Association to be used as it shall see fit, and that the judges' decision shall be final. Get out pad and pencil and get busy—put a few catchy words together "just right" and you'll be well paid.

ACTION STUFF

By Robert Welles Ritchie

In the Matter of Advice

Here with my blessing, is a plot hot off the grid for the writer of Hawkshaw fiction. Put horn-rimmed goggles on the "deteckatif," add a little atmospheric trimming-and-Presto!

Far up in the Sierras of Northern California is the abandoned lumber town of Shingle—a dreary little huddle of shacks about the gaunt, rusted stacks of a mill long since silent, all about are the bare, stripped mountains like fleshless bones of some monster. A dreary place at best; perfect atmosphere for a murder mystery.

And a murder mystery was Shingle's not many years ago. Something to keep all Lassen county agog for manw weeks. It centered about the person of Gimpy Struthers.

Gimpy was a blind man and Fate had added another burden to the darkness; he was desperately lame. His was almost a tortoise's crawl as I recall seeing him tap-tapping his way over the dusty roads about Shingle. He had the face of a saint had Gimpy; soft snowy heard which crept up pinkey cheeks to meet his curling white locks, and a pathetic upward lift to his sightless orbs as if always they were searching for the sunlight.

He lived with his wife and her daughter—Gimpy was her second husband—and Gimpy's contribution to the slender family income came from his wire work. His sentient fingers wrought with little bits of wire and strings of colored beads to make these stiff and hideous "floral pieces" some folk favor for grave decorations. The product of his tireless energy went down to San Francisco to sell for niggardly sums.

I should say incidentally that the blind wire worker of Shingle possessed an uncanny faculty for getting about. He knew every road in the vicinity of Shingle for five miles round.

One night Gimpy took his fiddle to a dance in the schoolhouse over on Deer Creek, and when the last reel was over he declined the offer of a ride home—and he liked to walk because he could feel the stars on his head. When finally he came to his house he discovered front and back door locked. He sat on the front steps and slept with his head on his knees. Neighbors found him so the next morning.

Those neighbors broke through the locked front door. They found mother and daughter dead in the same bed; their heads had been cloven through by an axe stroke.

Mind you. Front and back doors had been locked from within, with the keys remaining in the locks; every window in the one-story house was hld fast by nail driven from inside—for Mrs. Gimpy was a timonous woman—and there was no cellar. How could the murdered have let himself out of the house and left this condition of complete security behind him?

Two months after the tragedy Gimpy put in claim for $5,000 on policies covering the lives of wife and daughter. Social investigator came to look ovr the ground before the claims were met.

For a week he delved and pried while Gimpy sat on the front porch with his sightless eyes turned in that yearning twist to the sunlight. Then under a refuse heap a block way the detective found a very slender instrument called a wire nipped, such s one would use in the making of funeral pieces. So thin were its jaws that from without one could insert them in a keyhole and turn the key on the inside of the lock.

Gimpy passed his hands over the nipper, identified it as his and confessed to the murder.

She had cherished that deference and courtesy of Holles' as only a woman in her situation could, and the memory of it was ineffaceably impressed upon her mind.

She plied him with questions all through her noisy feeding, until she had drawn from him, not only the condition of his fortunes, but the reason of his return to England, the hopes he had nourished, and her own husband's wrecking of those hopes. It put her in a rage.

"God's life!" she roared at her ducal lord and master. "You would ha' turned him like a beggar from the door? Him—Randal!"

His grace, the dauntless, honest George Monk, who all his life had trodden so firmly the path of recitude, who feared no man, not even excepting the King whom he had made, lowered his proud, grave eyes before this termagant's angry glance.

"You see, my love, according to my lights . . ." He was beginning uneasily.

"Your lights quotha!" she shrilled in scorn. "Mighty dim lights they be, George, if you can't see to help a friend by them."

He smiled, gently, as if to show that he used gentleness from disinclination to assert his mastery. As best he could, seeing that he was subjected the while to a running fire or scornful interruptions, he made clear the situation as already he had made it clear to Holles.

"Lord, George!" she said, when he had finished, and her great red face was blank. "You are growing old. You are not the man you was. You, a kingmaker! La!" She withered him with her scorn. "Where are the wits that helped King Charles Stuart back to his own? You wasn't put off by the first obstacle in they days. What would ye be without me, I ask myself. It needs me to help ye see how ye can help a friend without bringing him under notice of them as might do him a hurt."

"If you can do that, my dear . ."

"If I can? I'd ha' my brains fried for supper if I couldn't. I would so—damme! For 'tis all they'd be good for. Is there no commands in your bestowing but commands here at home?"

His eyebrows flickered up, as if something in his mind responded to her suggestion.

"Are there no colonies to this realm of England? What of the Indies—East and West? There's a mort o' them Indies, I know, whither officers are forever being dispatched. Who'd trouble about Randal's name or story in one o' they?"

SHE LED HIM AWAY TO THEIR FRUGAL BOARD.

"Egad! 'Tis an idea!" The Duke looked at Holles, his glance brightening. "Why should you say to it Randal?"

Is there a post for me out there?" quoth the Colonel eagerly.

"At this very moment ,no. But vacancies occur. There are risks, of course, and . . ."

Holles cut in briskly. "I have said that I have lived on risks. And I've little cause to be so wedded to the old world that I'd not exchange it for the new."

"Why, then, we'll see. A little patience, and it may be mine to offer you some place abroad."

"And if he doesn't send word soon do you come and see me again, Randal," said her grace; "we'll quicken him. He's well enough; but he's growing old, and his wits is sluggish."

And the great man, whose eye had daunted armies, smiled benignly upon his termagant.

CHAPTER IV

Cherry Blossoms

COLONEL HOLLES knelt on the window-seat at the open casement of his parlor at the Paul's Head. Leaning on the sill, he seemed to contemplate the little sunlit garden with its two cherry trees on which some of those belated blossoms lingered still. Cherry blossoms he was contemplating, but not those before him. The two trees of this little oasis in the City of London had multiplied themselves into a cherry orchard set in Devon and in the years that were gone beyond reclaiming.

Mrs. Quinn's few perches of garden had dissolved into an acre of sunlit flowering orchard. Above the trees in the background to the right a spire thrust up into the blue, surmounted by a weather-vane in the shape of a fish—which he vaguely knew to be an emblem of Christianity. Through a gap on the left he beheld a wall, ivy-clad, crumbling at its summit. Over this a lad was climbing stealthily—a long-limbed, graceful, fair-haired stripling, whose features were recognizable for his own if from the latter you removed the haggard lines that the years and had living had imprinted.

An Appeal to The Citizens of Charlottetown

Diphtheria has broken out in the Protestant Orphanage.

If it becomes epidemic a large percentage of the inmates will die of the disease.

The inmates of this Institution may properly be considered the wards of the Protestant population of Prince Edward Island.

The only known remedy to prevent this disease from becoming epidemic is Anti-toxin.

To provide this remedy the sum of at least Five Hundred Dollars is required immediately

The Institution has not the funds to supply this remedy.

To allow the unfortunate inmates of the Orphanage to die from lack of proper medical treatment would be a blot on the fair name of this Province.

Five Hundred Dollars is but a small amount. Twenty-Five Dollars from Twenty subscribers will meet the present requirement.

We feel that the urgency of the case will appeal to our citizens and that the money will be subscribed and paid cheerfully without delay.

Health and good looks

—the reward of internal cleanliness

HEALTH and good looks go hand in hand. If you do not keep clean internally, your looks and health are undermined together. A clogged intestine breeds poisons that reach every part of the body. These poisons ruin the complexion and undermine health. Constipation brings on such ailments as headaches, bilious attacks, and insomnia—each of which sapsyour health and vitality. Soon much more serious conditions follow.

Good Looks Throughout Life If You Keep Clean Internally

In constipation, say intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness including the gravest diseases of life.

Laxatives Aggravate Constipation

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Medical science, through knowledge of the intestinal tract gained by X-ray observation, has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation.

Physicians Favor Lubrication

The lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Not a Medicine

Nujol is not a laxative and cannot gripe. Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world.

Cleanliness Demands More Than Bathing

Don't give disease a start. Adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. Nujol is not a medicine. Like pure water, it is harmless. Take Nujol as regularly as you brush your teeth or wash your face. For sale by all druggists.
