CAPTAIN BLOOD

A Romance of the Spanish Main

by RAFAEL SABATINI

Copyrighted, 1922 by Rafael Sabatini. "CAPTAIN BLOOD," a Vitaphone picture with J. Warren Kerrigan in the title role, is an adaptation of this thrilling novel.

CHAPTER XXII—Continued

Blood would have slipped out of Port Royal again that same night. But that hound Bishop had passed the word, and the fort kept a sharp lookout. In the end, though it took a fortnight, Blood babbled in. He said he and most of the men off in a frigate that he bought for the voyage. His game—as he'd secretly told me—was to follow and give chase. Whether that's the game he played or not I can't tell you; but here he is before me as I'd expected he would be.

Having delivered himself of his desertion of fact and falsehood, and thereby added one more to the exploits of Peter Blood, he enquired where the Captain might be. Being informed that he kept his ship, Wolverstone stepped into a boat and went aboard, to report himself, as he put it.

In the great cabin of the Arabella he found Peter Blood alone and very far gone in drink—a condition in which no man ever before remembered to have seen him. As Wolverstone came in, the Captain raised bloodshot eyes to consider him. A moment they sharpened in their gaze as he brought his visitor into the room. Then he laughed, a loose, idiotic laugh, that yet somehow was half a sneer.

"My God, Peter, what's this?" "Rum," said Peter. "Rum, from Jamaica."

"I'm asking you what ails you?" he bawled.

"Rum," said Captain Blood, again, and smiled. "Just rum. I answer all your questions. Why don't you answer mine? Watcher gonordo wi me?"

"I've done it," said Wolverstone. "Thank God, ye had the sense to hold your tongue till I came. Are ye sober enough to understand me?"

"Drunk or sober, allus derstand you."

"Then listen." And out came the tale that Wolverstone had told. The Captain staidied himself to grasp it.

"It'll do as well asertruth," said he, when Wolverstone had finished. "Ye're maund'n." Wolverstone growled, "We'll talk again tomorrow."

They did; but to little purpose, either that day or on any day thereafter while the rains—which set in that night—endured. Soon the shrewd Wolverstone discovered that rum was not what ailed Blood.

There was a canker eating at his heart, and the old Wolf knew enough to make a shrewd guess of its nature. He cursed all things that daggled petticoats, and, knowing his world waited for the sickness to pass.

But it did not pass. When Blood was not dicing or drinking in the taverns of Tortue, keeping company that in his saner days he had loathed, he was shut up in his cabin aboard the Arabella, alone and uncommunicative. His friends at this change in him, sought to reclaim him. Mademoiselle d'Ogeron, particularly distressed, sent him almost daily invitations, to few of which he responded.

Sometimes Blood asked himself why he had come back to Tortue at all. He was degenerating visibly under the eyes of all. He allowed a black beard to grow on cheeks that had ever been so carefully shaved; and the long, thick black hair, once so sedulously curled, hung now in a lank, untidy mane.

Wolverstone, the only one who held the clue to this degeneration, ventured once to hear him frankly about it.

"Lord, Peter! Is there never to be no end to this?" the giant had growled. "Will you spend your days moping and swilling 'cause a white-faced nunny in Port Royal 'll have none o' ye? 'Sblood and 'Ounds! If ye want the wench, why the plague does not ye go and fetch her?"

"If there's no other expedition 'll tempt you, why not Port Royal? There's enough plunder in the town to tempt the lads, and there's the wench for you. Shall I sound them on't?"

"Blood was on his feet, his eyes blazing, his livid face d'stort'd. 'Ye'll leave my cabin this minute, so ye will, or, by heaven, it's your corpse'll be carried out of it. Ye many a hound, d' ye dare come to me with such proposals?"

But at last, as his buccaneers were growing desperate, something happened, brought about by the captain's friend, M. d'Ogeron. One sunny morning the governor of Tortue came aboard the Arabella, accompanied by a chubby little gentleman, amiable of countenance, amiable and self-sufficient of manner.

"My captain," M. d'Ogeron delivered himself, "I bring you M. de Cussy, the Governor of French Hispaniola, who desires a word with you."

"You have a good force here under your command, my captain," said M. de Cussy. "Some eight hundred men. I understand they grow restive."

"I am speaking officially, my captain. There is war between France and Spain in Europe. It is the intention of France that this war should be carried out by the Navy. A fleet is coming out from Brest under the command of M. le Baron de Rivarol for that purpose. I have letters from him desiring me to equip a supplementary squadron and raise a body of not less than a thousand men to reinforce him on his arrival. What I have come to propose to you, my captain, at the suggestion of our good friend M. d'Ogeron, is, in brief, that you enroll your ships and your force under M. de Rivarol's flag."

"You are offering to take us into the French service?" he asked. "On what terms, monsieur?"

"With the rank of Capitaine de Vaisseau for yourself and suitable ranks for the officers serving under you. You will enjoy the pay of that rank, and you will be entitled, together with your men, to one-tenth share in all prizes taken."

"I will consult my officers," said Blood. They came and the matter was laid before them by M. de Cussy himself. Yberville, the young French filibuster, had the honor to point out to M. de Cussy that the share offered was too small. For one-fifth of the prizes, the officers would answer for their men; not for less. This M. de Cussy finally conceded, and the articles were drawn up and signed that very day.

The buccaneers were to be ad Petit Goave by the end of January, when M. de Rivarol had announced that he might be expected.

CHAPTER XXIII

M. DE RIVAROL

Captain Blood was in a disgruntled mood when he sailed from Tortue, and still in that mood when he came to his moorings in the bay of Petit Goave. In that same mood he greeted M. le Baron de Rivarol whom this nobleman with his feet of five men-of-war at last dropped anchor alongside the buccaneer ships.

Summoned to wait on him, Captain Blood repaired to the Castle of Petit Goave, where the interview was to take place. The baron, a tall, hawk-faced man of forty, very cold and distant of manner, measured Captain Blood with an eye of obvious disapproval. Of Hagthorpe, Yberville and Wolverstone who stood ranged behind their captain, he took no heed whatever. M. de Cussy offered Captain Blood a chair.

"A moment, M. de Cussy. I do not think M. le Baron has observed that I am not alone. Let me present to you, sir, my companions: Captain Hagthorpe of the Elizabeth, Captain Wolverstone of the Atropos and Captain Yberville of the Lachesis."

The baron stared hard and haughtily at Captain Blood. His manner implied plainly that he despised them, and that he desired them at once to understand it. It had a curious effect upon Captain Blood. It awoke the devil in him, and it awoke, at the same time, his self-respect, which of late had been slumbering. A sudden shame of his disordered, ill-kept appearance made him perhaps the more defiant. He waved his captains to the chairs that stood about.

"Draw up to the table, lads. We are keeping the baron waiting."

They obeyed him. Wolverstone with a grin that was full of understanding. Hagthorpe grew the stare of M. de Rivarol. He did the only thing remaining to mark a distinction between himself and them. He put on his hat.

"Ye're very wise now," said Blood amiably. "I feel the draught myself." And he covered himself with his plumed castor. "Shall we come to business?"

CUT STEEL EMBROIDERY

PARIS, Dec. 29.—"If I don't have one of those new frocks I'll burst," declared an American visitor today. If she has one of them she probably will burst out of it, for that is the way they are built. One charming example is of black satin with a shallow V neck and no sleeves. From arm pit to hips runs a band of cut steel embroidery. From hips to hem the black satin is covered with steel beads shadowed by drappings of monkey fur.

P. E. I. Exports to United States

The Guardian is indebted to Acting Consul Hoyt for the statistics used in the report on trade relations between the United States and Prince Edward Island for the year 1924, up to December 18. During this time the total value of exports from the Island was $909,033, the most important items being seed potatoes, live silver foxes and sheep.

The following is an interesting comparison of the amount and value of these exports for the last three years:

Table with columns: Year, Amount, Value. Rows for 1922, 1923, 1924 for Seed Potatoes, Live Silver Foxes, and Sheep.

Exports to the United States from P. E. I. in 1914 were valued at $491,267; in 1919, $1,834,020; in 1920, $2,246,095; in 1922, $1,020,865; in 1923, $1,266,933; in 1924, $909,035.

From July 1st, 1924 to Dec. 15, 1924, emigration from the Island to U. S. totalled 529 persons.
