MARRIAGE SCALES

By MILDRED BARBER

FATE WHIRLS THE DISTAFF.

The days that were bringing the unfolding of love to Doris and Craig Cullum held only perplexity and worry for Charles Page. Mariana had adopted a casual remote manner toward him that was particularly baffling. He recalled mournfully the old days when she had been so sweet, tender and alluring.

Charles, who was always even-tempered and optimistic and inclined toward love, was perplexed and worried at most troubles as imaginatively found himself beset with dark forebodings regarding Mariana. Being a man of the world, he couldn't deny that Mariana had reached the stage where the advent of another man is almost inevitable.

She wanted romance and he had somehow lost the knack of supplying it, or else she deliberately refused to find it in him. He only hoped some adventure wouldn't take advantage of the situation. Her beauty was a danger.

The alluring charm of the spring world beckoned Mariana and she was weary of death of bridge-luncheon and teas in stuffy, artificially lighted drawing rooms. The moonlight lured her from ball room floors. She even experimented a bit with light kisses in shadowy corners of the garden, but swiftly found them distasteful. Putting aside her appeal for amusement, she was tiresome. She disliked being touched by anyone who wasn't attracted to her. She wished she could be kissed by some one she loved desperately. But she guessed she never would be.

She regretted the rebuff she had given Doris, who was always cheering and full of ideas for amusement. Once or twice she called up Doris' apartment but found only the maid at home.

Would Madam leave her name? No, never mind. Madam answered listlessly, she would call again. She supposed that Doris was busy with her sleep. She half wished she had let Doris capture her services. Anything for a change. At the first opportunity, she resolved to invite Doris to one of her dinners. It would smooth over the slight rift between them without Mariana's having to humble herself to an apology. Doris never cherished spite, but she had intolerable pride. She would die rather than be humble, or thrust herself where she didn't honestly believe she was wanted.

If Mariana had guessed what was happening to Doris, she would have had her car out and been at Doris' doorstep within fifteen minutes after hearing the news. And she would have been there with fire in her eyes. Doris and an actor—impossible! But no breath of Doris' romance had reached her. The girls were as separate as the poles. Their little social orbits, even their shopping belt, rarely had a point of contact. Doris might have lived in New York and Mariana in San Francisco for all they saw and heard of each other.

But, if her sister was ignorant of the state of affairs concerning Doris, not so Doris' immediate associates, who took a lively and envious interest in her. "Craig Cullum is perfectly mad about you," Isabel would remark almost daily. "Anyone with half an eye can see it. I must say he's a remarkably poor actor when it comes to concealing his feelings."

"Nonsense!" Doris invariably blushed over her denial. "You have a romantic complex, Isabel. You went a love affair between every man and woman who exchange views on the weather."

"Don't tell me!" Isabel shuffled her papers importantly. "All I've got to say is that you're a lucky, lucky girl! Every woman on this pageant committee would give her eyes to be in your boots!"

Sergeant Hickman Recalls Tragic Days Of Samar Massacre

(United Press)
 SAN FRANCISCO, June 13.—The peaceful old Presidio of San Francisco, local army post since the early days of California's history, was the scene recently of the retirement from army life of the hero and one of the few survivors of the Balangiga massacre. In Samar, Taylor B. Hickman, of Knoxville, Tenn., master sergeant, was called forward from his company and complimented feelingly by a superior officer for his 26 years of inspiring service as a soldier of the United States.

Hickman was told he was still a sergeant only because he had modestly thrust aside a commission. A decoration was pinned on his chest hands were clasped, and the old hero of Balangiga walked back to his quarters, a soldier no longer, but a greater hero than ever. There was a tear on the rim of the steely eye and the fighting jaw trembled a bit. The company, at rest, followed him with their eyes until he was out of sight.

"I would go back again tomorrow if my country called," Hickman said. "I think I have a few good fights left in me yet."

Seventy-one enlisted men and three officers of Company C, Ninth U. S. Infantry, went into camp at Balangiga, island of Samar, in the Philippines, 23 years ago. A few days later occurred the attack on these men, and the massacre which in the annals of the American army has been compared to the last stand of Custer. Totally without warning and while at breakfast the Americans were rushed by hundreds of Visayans armed with heavy knives called bolos. The three officers were killed in the first onslaught. The fight lasted well over two hours, and the next day the eight American survivors, including Sergeant Hickman, reached Basay in native canoes. The natives killed by the Americans numbered 250.

SWIFT LIFE OF TODAY DECRIED AT DOCTORS' SESSION

CHICAGO, June 14.—At the American Medical Association session yesterday the generation of jazz was blamed for the increase in the prevalence of goitre by Dr. G. W. Newell, who declared half of the women and girls in the Middle West were afflicted.

"High-powered motor cars, dances, theatres, cabarets, liquor and the other innumerable factors that play a part in the regular life of many of our urban adolescent today," he said, "have set such a hectic pace that the human nerve system is not equal to it."

Comes to Defense.

The girl of today is something to be proud of, said Dr. Katherine D. Mannion, retiring president of the National Medical Women's Association, meeting in connection with the American Medical Association. "The modern girl is the

ALL AT SEA

A girl at a public library inquired if "The Red Boat" was in. "Don't think we have the book," she was told.

"Oh, excuse me," said the girl. "I made a mistake. The title is 'The Scarlet Launch.'"

After a search, the library assistant reported that no book with that title was listed in the card catalogue.

"But I am sure you have the book," the girl insisted. Suddenly she opened her handbag and produced a slip of paper on which something was written. Then she blushed. "Oh, I beg your pardon," she said. "It's 'The Ruby Yacht' by a man named Omar, I want."

SENSATION OVER CHURCH UNION

OTTAWA, June 14.—A sensation has been created here by the circulation of a letter from Hon. W. R. Motherwell to all the Liberal members of the House in support of Church Union. Mr. Motherwell says that if the present amendment to the Bill, referring the matter to the courts, which will shortly before the House becomes law it will greatly disappoint the two million Canadians supporting the Bill, and the Liberal Party
