Men Marooned

By George Marsh

THE STORY

In the blue dawn the dog-team pulled out of camp bound down river to the west fork, which would take them north through a gash in the barrens to the watershed of the Canoe. The norther had left much drifted snow and the stiff legs of the huskies cut the pace to a walk. Shot, exuberant after his two days of enforced idleness, ranged to the front and flanks in search of ptarmigan, rabbit and mouse. Along the river, the broken-out drift in the old trail marked the hunters on their way to the rendezvous on the Canoe. It was evident that the Cree trappers in the north of the island were bound for the medicine lodge of the old shaman. Twenty to thirty hunters with a catch of at least one hundred foxes would gather to witness the necromancy of the conjurer. On the power of the old man's magic would depend the destination of twenty thousand dollars' worth of fox pelts. Whether Elkwan or the schooner at Seal cove was to enjoy a rich Christmas trade would be determined by the ability of Saul and his spirit coadjutors to nullify the superstitious fears aroused by the sinister rumors of the crafty Etienne. It would be a battle worth watching, thought Garth, keen for the meeting in the lonely valley of the Canoe between the grasping Cree who had betrayed him and the resourceful Savanne. But one condition he had imposed on the half-breed—that there should be no bloodshed. They had come to Akimiski to save the trade of the future, as well as the present, and under no circumstances was the head man to abuse or threaten either Saul or his sons. He, Guthrie, would have something to say concerning the long arm of the company in its future dealings with the man who had deserted to the enemy; but the command was—no fighting.

"What you do with that Mokoman?" had demanded Etienne with a grimace.

"If he shows up at the pow-wow, and interferences, I'll leave him to you."

"I tak' good care of heem," grunted the other.

At the fork they left the main river trail to follow the branch leading north.

"Dey all go to Souci's party," laughed Etienne. "Four, five team pass here dis morning."

As the tender-footed huskies drew the sled at a walk or slow trot, Shot reveled in the game sign of the scrub along shore. On a foray into the timber, the trail of the snowshoe-rabbit, which had first lured him, was crossed by that of a more enticing fox. Keen with the lust of the hunt, Shot, followed the trail back through the scrub and out into the open barren on the shoulders of the valley. There, far from the river, he stopped. Before him the webbed imprint of snowshoes cut the fox tracks he followed. The dog sniffed curiously, but it was a vague, unfamiliar scent that the fresh trail carried. Slowly at first, then at a lope, he followed it down through the timber. As he neared the river the voices of Garth and Etienne drifted faintly in from the ice. He was puzzled. From his rigid war training he had learned silence when business was afoot. And this seemed shell holes—from trenches—had patrolled forest, as at present, in absolute silence. In some occult way the keen-witted dog seemed that again, there in the white north far from Flemish battle fields, he was at his old trade, guarding with quivering nostrils, eyes and ears tense, the safety of the man out there on the ice.

On he went, weaving in and out of the thick scrub, relentless as a wolf.

COLDS Keep Away

Tonsillitis and Sore Throat Relieved

Simple to overcome colds by the CATARRHOZONE METHOD. Put a saucupan of water on a stove. Add a half teaspoonful of CATARRHOZONE to a pint of water, and bring it to a boil. Let the steam from the kettle fill the room so that the medicated air is breathed by the sufferer. You will notice an immediate result. The cough is relieved, the stuffed-up nostrils are cleared, the COUGH, BRONCHITIS and COLD quickly disappear.

For adults suffering from Grippe, BRONCHITIS or CATARRH, this treatment is ideal. For FIFTY CENTS you can buy CATARRHOZONE in any drug store.

Suddenly the airedale stiffened, hair rising like bush bristles along his spine. Near the shore in the thickest ahead was something dark, motionless.

The war dog froze, stiff as the spruce above him, one paw suspended in air. A vague scent reached his working nostrils. Then, like a lynx through the dusk, the airedale drifted up the trail.

Out on the river ice the voice of Garth called. "Here Shot!" But the head of the dog did not turn. His small, terror eyes never left the shape on the snow. He knew that the lean, brown barrel thrust before the dark body was a rifle—a maker of fire and death.

Three-four steps nearer, then gathering beneath him the steel springs which were the muscles of his legs, the airedale leaped. As Shot's legs ripped into the shoulder of the Indian's capote, the rifle exploded. A bullet hoached from the frozen sled cover and whined away over the river. Two men dropped behind the sled as the team stopped. Reaching up, Etienne wrenched his cased rifle from his lashings and fired twice below a shroud of blue smoke hanging in the spruce, where an enraged dog silently grappled with an unknown enemy. But his fire was not returned. There, under the trees, an Indian frantically fought to turn his rifle on the maddened brute who had ripped parka to ribbons and hurled him backward to the snow. Parrying the snap of punishing fangs with a blow of his gun butt, the Indian gauged his feet, to meet another lunge before he aimed his gun. Again the dog leaped, carrying the man with him. Fangs slashing at bared throat—a choked cry—the airedale's jaws shut on dark flesh—ripped—and the would-be assassin lay on the snow with torn throat.

There Garth and Etienne found them, the airedale lying beside the kill. Etienne bent to stare, with an oath, into the features, knotted in their death grimace, of—Joe Mokoman.

Magnesia Best For Your Indigestion

Most people who suffer, either occasionally or chronically from gas, sourness and indigestion, have now discovered disagreeable diets, patent foods and the use of harmful drugs, stomach tonics, medicines and artificial digestants. And instead, following the advice so often given in these columns, take a teaspoonful or four tablets of Bisulphated Magnesia in a little water after meals with the result that their stomach no longer troubles them, they are able to eat as they please and they enjoy much better health. Those who use Bisulphated Magnesia never dread the approach of meal time because they know this wonderful anti-acid and food corrective drug will instantly neutralize the stomach acidity, sweeten the stomach, prevent food fermentation, and make digestion easy. Try this plan yourself but be certain to get Bisulphated Magnesia especially prepared for stomach use.
