CHAPTER XXVI SISTERS

That night while they were dressing for dinner Myra said evenly, "Why didn't you take the tender we did? It would have been nice to play around together, Mr. Rigby thought it was strange."

"Sally hesitated. Her usual frankness was swallowed up in her loyalty to Richard. Of course she adored Myra, but Richard—" "I don't know how it happened," she said quickly. "I was as surprised as you were."

They were moving again, this time not to stop until they arrived at the. A fresh breeze stirred the cotton curtains at the port holes. Myra and Sally stood side by side before their respective mirrors. Myra was applying mascara to her eyelashes. It was a delicate job and required concentration. She could not look at Sally as she talked; nevertheless she went on speaking.

"You're crazy about this Alden man, aren't you?" "Crazy about him?" "Why not be frank for once in your life. You know you are. He's mad about you, too. Anybody can see that."

Mad about her—mad about her! Sally's heart fairly sang the words. Was he? But no, that couldn't be. Why should he care for her? He was so much a man of the world, and yet not in the same way that Mr. Rigby was. He had been kind to her, of course; he had devoted a lot of time to her. But as for really caring—oh, no. Besides, that Myra was married. Tom couldn't be. She was married. Tom and Marjorie lurked in the background of her life in spite of the fact that there were times when she felt completely divorced from

His brown hair was thick and waved back from his temples. His mouth was arrogant. Mechanically she reached for the small mascara box while Myra watched her. She ran cold water all life save that on the ship. Strange, the way you felt out here! Just as if you were nowhere and that nothing mattered. "I think he likes me." "Likes you! Don't be ridiculous. He's no callow boy. He's had experience with women, don't fool yourself on that score. The question is, how much do you like him?" "I like him very much."

Myra was impatient and a black flock appeared under her lower lid. She quickly eradicated it and went on brushing her lashes. "How much?" Sally turned on her. She felt suddenly bemused. She didn't want to talk about herself and Richard. She wanted to drift. "I might ask the same question," she said quickly. "How much do you like Mr. Rigby?" Myra had finished her eyelashes. They looked soft and velvety and gave her eyes a dewy look. She was much prettier with it than she was without, and for the first time in her life Sally had an impulse to try it. She wanted to be beautiful. She longed to be the most beautiful woman in the world. Of late she had had dreams of sweeping into a room where other women cast venomous looks at her while all the men gathered about her. But, of course, she had eyes for only one man. He would come across the room to her, and their glances would meet. The look that they ex-
