Lake Erie Run Running Extinct

CLEVELAND, O., Dec. 9.—Hard times for run-runners on Lake Erie have made them almost extinct, according to C. W. Pollock, acting collector of customs. Every conceivable scheme—except perhaps the use of the submarine—for smuggling Canadian liquor onto the shores of the Buckeye State has failed. Each scheme has proved too hazardous and too expensive. Pollock said that the new Canadian law, under which liquor-laden vessels may not embark for any country embracing prohibition has aided materially in suppressing the run-runners. "With just the United States coast guards and customs agents watching for runners it was possible for a few of them to get through, but with agencies of both the Canadian and United States governments constantly on guard, it is practically a physical impossibility," he said. "Not only that, but liquor intended for consumption here is not available in quantities large enough to warrant running it across the lake. It would have to be bootlegged in Canada also, making the undertaking doubly hazardous." Shipping liquor first to French possessions in the Atlantic Ocean and thence to the United States, to be conveyed by rail to various parts of the country, has also proved a financial failure to run-runners, according to customs officials. One $90,000 carload of liquor was shipped from Montreal to the French island of St. Pierre, south of Newfoundland, thence to Galveston, Texas, and finally by rail to Cleveland. After that long and expensive voyage, Pollock said, federal agents seized it. Use of aeroplanes by run-runners was halted about a month ago when two expensive ships were seized.

Backstage Drama Makes Chicago Opera Opening

CHICAGO, Ills., Dec. 9.—Backstage at the Chicago Civic Opera last week was a slightly stooped little woman. She was dressed simply in black, she was almost part of the shadows. Many passed her by. A few, knowing her, stopped to inquire: "It will be time again soon. Will you have the courage then?" Eagerly responsive, a quick smile lights up her dark eyes. "I want"—her English is broken by her Italian accent—"but I'm so afraid I cry. I feel like cry all time. Maybe I cry used to it back here." But she is not a stage shy artist. The baton will not be lifted for her. Audiences will not wait for her song. Baskets of flowers that go backstage are not for her. But those who know pay her tribute. That timid figure was Signora Rosa di Leo, but for whose hands—now so thin that her wide gold wedding band is on her middle finger—opera might be lacking a star that is shining this season. But the courage that braved poverty has not yet been enough to take her out front to hear her daughter sing. The signora is the mother of Seraphina di Leo, opera's Cinderella, who went from New York's poorer section to laurels in La Scala in Milan, Italy, where she made her operatic debut last year. Came that big night—stage hands, who know that not all the drama of opera is on the stage, could tell about it—when Seraphina bowed to audiences as Leonora in "Il Trovatore." "Curtain rising," boomed the call box in Seraphina's dressing room. The last dab of rouge. The last dusting of powder. A quick adjustment of her costume. The orchestra's opening chords carried down the hall—"Quick, mother, out front, or you will miss the opening." "Si, si, Bambina Mia." Seraphina sped away to be lost in the gaily costumed throngs in the wings. The mother followed. She reached the door that would take her out front. She paused, turned back toward the wings. Soon from the stage came the first notes of "Tacea La Notte Placida." Seraphine—her Bambina—was singing, singing in grand opera! It was too much for the mother, tired from long years of getting up at 5 o'clock in the morning to go to work. Back down the hall she fled, back to the dressing room. Eyes that had followed a million stitches in putting in pockets in hundreds of men's suits, brimmed. She sobbed. Faintly, through the closed door, drifted song and music. "Savarlo," she called to her husband, dead three years. "She's singing."

Olympic Sextette In Pink Of Condition

WINNIPEG, Man., Dec. 9.—(By The Canadian Press)—Power pulses in the smooth movements of Canada's Olympic hockey machine today as it is groomed for its greatest task. Under the keen grey eyes of Coach Jack Hughes, check-overs have been conducted, additions made, alterations effected. The mighty mechanism has been stepped up to a new height of operating efficiency. Winnipeg, wearers of the Maple Leaf for the world title-tourney at Lake Placid, N. Y., next February, are stronger than when they won the right to represent Canada. They boast a better-balanced offensive than they showed in the sweep to the Allan cup eight months ago, a sturdier defence and the benefit of another year's experience. Every member of the crew which trimmed the East's strongest and the West's best, in the title play-downs is still on the job. Wingman Ken Moors, first youngster ousted due to a broken arm from the stretch-run in the championship race, is stepping faster than ever. And two new members have been added to the royal roster. Leader of the Winnipeg league's scores last season, sold-built Walter Monson has been signed for centre-ice duty. Craftiest and most showy of the city's individualists, Monson stands out as a new arrowhead for Winnipeg goal-getting thrusts. Even in early season play he has teamed up in unexpected style with his front-line mates. Pivoting between flying "Lindy" Lindquist on the right and roaming Romeo Rivers on the left Monson fills the roomy shoes of big "Hack" Simpson, whose 185 pounds of hockey flesh will probably be planted on defence. The former Elmwood star adds speed and scoring-power to the starting line at the expense only of pure poundage. If Simpson is definitely assigned to rear-guard duty, the youthful giant will be back at the position he chose for his debut in hockey. His long reach, deft foot-work and hulking size will make him a valuable aid to Defencemen Roy Hinkle and Hugh Sutherland, both of whom he outweighs by 15 pounds. With bulky Bill Cockburn in the nets, the Winnipeggers may forget the greater portion of potential defensive worries. Last season, crafty coaching by Cockburn, long rated among the finest of Canada's amateur puck-snatchers, contributed materially toward the success of the Hinkle-Sutherland guard-system. From early indications, Cockburn has lost none of his last season's keenness of eye. The bludgeon-and-rapier strategy in forward-line shifts will be retained this season by Coach Hughes, for he anticipates no change in his midjet second line. "Tack" Garbutt and "Stoney" Wise, efficiency, born of continued incentive and left-winger together for years, team up once more with raven-haired Moore, whose right-wing dashes open up many a play. Winnipeg as they round into form. Lighter by 25 pounds to the man, for the Olympic fray.

CANADA'S TURBINE INSTALLATION

The total turbine installation in Canada on Jan. 1 1930 according to the Dominion Water Power Hydro-metric Bureau, Department of the Interior, amounted to 6,125,000 h. p. or only a little more than 14 per cent of the permissible installation of the known water power resources of the Dominion.

War Prisoners Still In Siberia

TRENTO, Italy, Dec. 9.—Hundreds of Great War prisoners still are held in Siberian labor camps, according to Giuseppe Girardi, an Austrian soldier, who has just escaped after 16 years incarceration. Girardi, learning only a year ago that the war had ended, managed to evade his guards and make his way to Vienna. He found that his native village, near here, had become part of Italy and that he no longer was an Austrian. It suited him well, for he was of Italian origin. He brought the news that 80 soldiers who were believed to have perished were in the camp from which he escaped. Hundreds—and perhaps thousands—of soldiers who served the Central Powers in the war still are in Russian prisons, he estimated.

Opposition To Tariff Measure

PARIS, Dec. 9.—(A.P.)—The commerce ministry predicted today that France may need more tariff protection than she now enjoys from her 15 per cent super-duty. At the same time the Chamber of Deputies defeated the Laval Government 325 to 281 on a proposal to levy an import tax of two per cent on raw materials, four per cent on partially manufactured goods, and six per cent on manufactured products. This measure, which was not made a question of confidence, and so does not affect the life of the Government, was turned down apparently because the deputies feared it would send up the cost of living. Following much newspaper comment during the last few days about "tariff war" with Great Britain, the Commerce ministry declared the British Government had "made a mistake" in establishing high duties. "We regard England as a friend," a ministry spokesman said, "but even friends sometimes make mistakes." France, it was said, intends to find other markets so far as possible and to increase her own consumption of certain products hit by the new British duties. "After all," the Ministry spokesman said, "English exports to France are small, and high French tariffs would affect only a few items and so would not help the French producers who are momentarily hurt." The French 15 per cent super-duty was established after Great Britain suspended the gold standard and before the recent 50 per cent anti-dumping measures in Britain became effective. The radical socialists were among the principal opponents of the tariff measure defeated in the Chamber today.

MR. THOMAS A. DAVIES

Mr. A. W. Hyndman, Manager of the Royal Bank of Canada in this city, received a wire yesterday from his brother, Mr. Justice J. D. Hyndman, stating that the latter's brother-in-law, Thomas Atwood Davies, passed away at the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal, following a severe operation ten days ago. The late Mr. Davies, who was 50 years of age, was the only son of the late Sir Louis Davies, formerly Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada. He was a native of Charlottetown, was by profession a civil engineer, and for a number of years was a member of the staff of one of the governmental departments at Ottawa. He leaves to mourn a widow, nee Miss Haycock, of Ottawa, three sons and one daughter; also three sisters, Mrs. Justice Hyndman, of Ottawa, Mrs. MacGrath, of Chicago, and Miss Gertrude, of Ottawa.
