Coniston, Ontario.—"After a severe operation and a three weeks' stay in a hospital I returned home so weak that I was unable to move a chair. For four months I was almost frantic with pains and suffering until I thought sure there could not be any help for me. I had very severe pains in my left side and suffered agony every month. One day when I was not able to get up my mother begged me to try your medicine. My husband got me a bottle of Vegetable Compound at once and I took it. I started a second bottle, and to my surprise and joy the pains in my side left me completely and I am able to do all my work without help. I am a farmer's wife, so you see I can't be idle long. In all, I have taken six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, five boxes of the Compound Tablets, two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Purifier, and have also used the Sanative Wash."—Mrs. L. LAJUNESS, Box 103, Coniston, Ontario.

August 26th. All along, I have been impressed by the attitude of at least the summer public to our tragedies; as each one came it brought with it its temporary thrill; for a moment, one might say, the dancing stopped and a bit of drama was enacted on the stage. Then the curtain fell, the band struck up, and the whirl began again, with some inconsiderable of the dancers missing.

Poor Carroway's widow is working at one of the shore hotels, and has bobbed her hair. And a small boy with adenoids delivers our milk and chickens; I caught him this morning chalking up a triangle within a circle on one of the pillars of the gate.

The main house shut and empty, a new assistant keeper at the light-house, and perhaps a closed room and grief at the Morrison farm house—these are the only apparent scars left, to mark our summer's wounding.

I saw Larkin this morning. He believes that we may be able to sell the property as a hotel site; as this would ensure destroying the house, it seems the best thing.

But one other change I have not recorded. Watching Halliday as I do, affectionately and not too openly, I can see a very considerable change in him. He is like a man lit from within by some flame, of vengeance perhaps, or resolutions certainly. And he is moody at times; his old gaiety is gone. He has put me out of his confidence, not because he does not trust me, but because for some reason he is afraid of me. And the same, I think, is largely true of Edith in the last day or two.

It is as though he said, in effect: "Keep out. It is dangerous. I am willing to take a chance, but I want to know that the rest of you are safe." Now then, however, I gather something. This yesterday he said: "You have to remember this; we are not dealing with a criminal, but with an idea."

August 26th. All along, I have been impressed by the attitude of at least the summer public to our tragedies; as each one came it brought with it its temporary thrill; for a moment, one might say, the dancing stopped and a bit of drama was enacted on the stage. Then the curtain fell, the band struck up, and the whirl began again, with some inconsiderable of the dancers missing.

Poor Carroway's widow is working at one of the shore hotels, and has bobbed her hair. And a small boy with adenoids delivers our milk and chickens; I caught him this morning chalking up a triangle within a circle on one of the pillars of the gate.

The main house shut and empty, a new assistant keeper at the light-house, and perhaps a closed room and grief at the Morrison farm house—these are the only apparent scars left, to mark our summer's wounding.

I saw Larkin this morning. He believes that we may be able to sell the property as a hotel site; as this would ensure destroying the house, it seems the best thing.

But one other change I have not recorded. Watching Halliday as I do, affectionately and not too openly, I can see a very considerable change in him. He is like a man lit from within by some flame, of vengeance perhaps, or resolutions certainly. And he is moody at times; his old gaiety is gone. He has put me out of his confidence, not because he does not trust me, but because for some reason he is afraid of me. And the same, I think, is largely true of Edith in the last day or two.

It is as though he said, in effect: "Keep out. It is dangerous. I am willing to take a chance, but I want to know that the rest of you are safe." Now then, however, I gather something. This yesterday he said: "You have to remember this; we are not dealing with a criminal, but with an idea."

Again, he has asked me for Uncle Horace's letter, and has been apparently making a study of it.

Only along the lines of what I call the super-normal phenomena of the summer does he show his old openness, and there he is frankly puzzled. My decision not to call in Cameron has, I think, disappointed him. But my reasons are sound. Cameron's coming might result in unpleasant press publicity for us, and more than that, puts me where I do not intend to be placed, among the beneficiaries.

He accepted that decision to-day, however, without comment. But shortly after he asked Edith for the letter from Evanston, and sat thinking over it for some time.

"Of course, with a little imagination," he said, "you might figure that these people were somehow let in on what happened here last year. But why Evanston?" And after a pause, following a train of thought:

"Of course I suppose, if you grant a spirit world, you have to grant that where time and space do not exist and only vibration counts—whatever that may mean—you could tune in Evanston as well as—well, as easily as you can on the radio."

But he got up soon after, saying that we were all crazy and he himself was the maddest of the lot, and went away.

August 27th. Livingstone is a curious chap, dapper, fastidious and tactful. He is almost too much of a gentleman; I have had the feeling, and I think Jane has also, that a part of his reticence is caution, that he is always watchful, subconsciously at least, lest the veneer crack, and something secretly vulgar be exposed.

I am still wondering why he came to see me to-day; he was sitting, gloved and spatted, in our small living room when Clara brought his card to me in the garage and I hurried in. Sitting, too, starting at our ridiculous parlor organ, with an odd look on his face.

"Haven't seen one for years," he said, in his clipped and yet deliberate manner. "Where'd you happen on that one?"

"It was here when we came," I explained. He gave it another glance before we sat down, and then apparently dismissed it. But not entirely. Now and then he looked toward it, and once I thought I saw a slight smile, as though back in his mind was some equally faint humorous memory. But he came to the point with a certain directness.

"You're a man of sense," he said. "I came because you've got a head on you."

"I used to have," I admitted modestly. "Lately, of course—"

"There may be something, but let it alone."

And that, so far as I can make out, was the purpose of his visit. He showed a certain relief, as if he had got rid of something momentous to him, and soon after he took an abrupt departure. Being careful to remove his glove, which he had absentmindedly put on again, before shaking hands!

Thomas tells me that another attempt was made to get into the house last night. He had left his pruning ladder outside under a tree, and found it upright against Gordon's window this morning.

Later, Halliday corroborates Thomas's story, with further details. He was on the lower floor, reading, when he was disturbed by the crash of a pane of glass above. He ran upstairs, but was evidently heard. There was no one on the ladder when he got there, and a thorough search showed no one in the house.

The window was the one through which he had watched Gordon leave the house by the rope.

August 28th. It is impossible for me to-night to draw any conclusion from last evening's discovery; I have not my old faith in circumstantial evidence. I can only ask myself of an innocent man hides in his own house.

Jane had one of her bad headaches last night, and at eleven o'clock I took the car and went into the village pharmacy. It was closed, however, and I was at a loss to know what to do. In the emergency I thought of Hayward's office; like most country doctors he keeps a medicine cabinet and fills many of his own prescriptions. I went there, therefore, and rang the bell.

It took some time and several rings to rouse the housekeeper, an elderly and tactful woman, and when she finally opened the door it was to say that the doctor was away, and to attempt to close it again. I prevented this, however, and managed to get past her and into the hall.

"I only want to get some medicine," I explained. "The cabinet is in the back office, isn't it?" "I'm not allowed to let anybody into the office."

"Nonsense!" I said sharply. "Anyhow, you are not allowing me. I'm going."

She seemed completely at a loss, and I thought too that she was listening. With my hand on the knob of the waiting room, I caught the attentive look on her face, and found myself listening also. It seemed to me that there was somebody moving in the back office, and immediately after I caught the stealthy closing of a door somewhere. With that she appeared to relax.

"You are sure you know what you want?" she asked. "Quite sure," I said, and went through the waiting room to the consulting office. She followed me and turned on the light, and stood there watching me intently. The room was filled with tobacco smoke, and she saw that I noticed it, for she said:

"My husband was sitting in here. I'd be glad if you don't say anything about it."

I am not suspicious, and the confession satisfied my faint feeling that something was not quite right in the house. I got the tablets from the cabinet, and being nervous about unlabelled bottles went to the desk; there, neatly piled up, were the month's bills for Hayward's professional services, written in his own untidy hand, and one not finished on the pad.

The woman was still watching me, and I managed to write my label, glue it to the bottle, and make my departure without, I think, showing that I had made any discovery whatever.

But nothing can alter my conviction that Hayward is hiding in his own house, and that he was in that back room when I rang the door-bell at something before midnight. Not even Halliday's opinion that, since Hayward is officially at home today he had the right to be "not at home" last night.

"After all," he said, "give the poor devil his due. Skipper. He works hard, and why shouldn't he get back a day earlier than he is expected to? He's a few hours late on his bills? He has to live."

But he seems to me to be a trifle too casual about it. I admit that he puzzles me, these days.

August 31st. After all, one can find the mysterious where it does not exist. I may not yet know why Halliday considers it necessary to watch the main house at night. But I do know the reason for Livingstone's extraordinary visit.

Mrs. Livingstone, sitting with Jane during her convalescence, read the letter from Evanston, and is eager to form a similar circle, to sit in the house itself. And poor Livingstone is opposing it and is making, for some reason or other, quite a business of it.

She was supported in this by Edith, and even, half-heartedly, by Jane herself. A change of front which astonishes me. Mrs. Livingstone has apparently some absurd idea that we may receive "a clue or something," as she vaguely puts it; and on my firm refusal departed, indignantly convinced that I have lost a great opportunity to solve our mystery.

Later, Halliday wants the same! Nothing has so surprised me in years as his willingness to join the table-tippers. But I suspect in him some purpose not far removed from Mrs. Livingstone's although just what he hopes to discover baffles me entirely.

"Why not?" he said, when I told him. "After all, we've had enough already to make something of a case for the other side."

"The other side of what?" "The other side of the veil," he explained gravely, and then, seeing my face, was obliged to laugh.

"There is a pleasure in being mad which none but madmen know," he quoted at me. "I've heard you say that Descartes advises us to seek for truth, freed from all preconceived ideas. Who are we, to stand in the way of truth?"

"And we are to search for it, sitting around a table in the dark?" "Precisely that, Skipper," he said, with sudden gravity, and has left me to make what I can of it.

Twelve days have now elapsed since the murder here, and the police know no more than they did on the morning of the 20th.

Now and then a car stops outside the gate, but our curious crowds are gone. Save that some nocturnal relic-hunter has chipped a corner off the sun-dial the place is much as it was before. All this water over the dam, and it has brought us nothing.

Ontario Presbyterians Weighty Problems

TORONTO, Ont., Oct. 25.—The Presbyterian Synod of Toronto and Kingston which extends from Gananoque to Kitchener and from Toronto on the South to New Liskeard on the North, and which on Dec. 31st, numbered more than 54,000 members, will have a number of weighty problems at its meeting in Knox Church, Toronto, on Oct. 26.

The Presbytery of Peterboro is asking that a synodical missionary be appointed to superintend the Home Mission fields and minority groups within the bounds of the Synod.

The Synod will probably be favored with an address from Rev. Dr. J. A. Seymour, of South Australia. Dr. Seymour is paying an extended visit to Canada and is at present supplying in the pulpit of the moderate of the General Assembly, the Rev. Dr. A. J. MacGillivray of Guelph.

Rev. Stuart C. Parker will speak on "The New Outlook and Ideals of the Presbyterian Church."

The congregation in Beaverton in endeavoring to secure justice from the Ontario Government in the matter of Church property. The congregation claim that when the vote was taken on Church Union they lost their property because the vote was not properly conducted.

A review of Home and Foreign Missions, the educational and benevolent funds of the church, will necessarily receive considerable attention.

Character of Christ Portrayed For Screen

NEW YORK, Oct. 25.—The question whether the character representing Christ in religious motion pictures should smile has been answered by churchmen with three films which preserve a quiet dignity for the Savior's role.

The pictures will receive their first public exhibition here tomorrow. The question about smiling was raised during the filming by a Catholic priest, who said that the tradition of his church is that the Christ did not smile. At one point the Character of the Savior was permitted a radiant facial expression said to approximate a smile.

Used in Church Services Churchmen of all denominations co-operated in making the pictures, which are intended principally for use in supplementing religious services. Their sponsor, William E. Harmon, said he hoped the pictures "would help to revitalize interest in the church and give Sunday morning golf courses a rest cure."

Three films were produced under a $50,000 endowment given by Mr. Harmon for the Religious Motion Picture Foundation, under auspices of the Harmon Foundation.

Picture Steps in His Life The first in the series is "Jesus Confronts His Critics," a one-reel picture taken from John 8: 1-2, where the Pharisees attempt to trip up Jesus in the interpretation of the law of Moses.

The second is: "The Unwelcome Guest," a one-reel picture, Luke 7: 36-50, showing Jesus in the house of Simon, the Pharisee.

The third is: "Forgive Us Our Debtors," a two-reel picture, Matthew 18: 23-35, in which Jesus tells the story of the unmerciful servant. The fourth is in four reels, "The Rich Young Ruler," Matthew 19: 16 and is built around the story of the rich young man who asked, "Good Master what good things shall I do, that I may have eternal life?"

Cast Of All Denominations The cast was made up of many denominations, including Catholics, Protestants and Christian Scientists. Ministers from many denominations viewed the "rushes," the daily takes, and offered suggestions to eliminate possible controversial points.

Only the leading players were secured from professional ranks. Gene DeVal, who plays the Christ role, is a Catholic who wears a decoration given him by the Pope for his interpretations of the Christ in roles in Europe. Other members of the cast were drawn from theological schools.

Mr. Harmon was inspired to his present undertaking through a successful experiment in placing re-

Supreme Court of Nova Scotia Divides on Stated Questions—Matter Will Probably go to Privy Council.

HALIFAX, Oct. 23.—The Supreme court of Nova Scotia divided two and two today on the stated case submitted for decision as to whether or not membership in the legislative council could be increased at the instance of the government of Nova Scotia and as to whether or not members of the council held their appointments at the pleasure of the provincial government.

Chief Justice R. E. Harris and Judge J. A. Chisholm upheld the contention of the law officers of the Crown in Nova Scotia that the membership could be increased and that the councilors held their appointments at the pleasure of the local government. Judges H. Melish and W. F. Carroll dissented from this opinion.

The effect of the judgment is that the question at issue remains where it was before submission to the Supreme Court. The matter will now be taken before either the Supreme Court of Canada or the judicial committee of the Privy Council. The stated case arose out of a desire on the part of the provincial government to abolish Nova Scotia's Upper Chamber, one of the two remaining in the administrative scheme in the Canadian provinces.

If the government's petition is ultimately sustained the council will be abolished either by appointing a sufficient number of new councilors pledged to support an abolition bill to give effect to the legislation as was attempted in New South Wales or those members opposing an abolition bill will be retired on the recommendation of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. In the event of the government's position being finally disproved it is understood that a plebiscite will be held on the question, provision having been made in the estimates of last session for such a referendum.
