

Stricken With Terrible Backache

"High-rigger" in very bad way until Gin Pills gave relief

To have kidney trouble, when in the heart of the woods during the wet season, is very serious, as Mr. J. F. Miller found out.

But let him tell the story himself. "In the woods, last fall," he writes, "I was soaked to the skin for days. Cold got me in the back. I was so bad the woods boss wanted to send me to the city for medical treatment. One of the boys advised Gin Pills. In four days I was back on the job. Nearly all the boys," Mr. Miller adds, "carry Gin Pills in their pack."

The truth is kidneys are such hard-working organs they can't stand neglect. Backache is only one sign of trouble. Dizziness, brick dust in urine, swollen joints, headaches, a burning sensation attendant on scanty or too frequent urination are others. At the first indication of trouble, take Gin Pills. Avoid Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago and even more serious drugs. 50c. at all druggists. National Drug & Chemical Co. of Canada Limited, Toronto, Canada.

Astronomy Professor: Can you mention a star that possesses rings?
Student: Why, every screen favorite has dozens of them, sir.

YOU BET
"The next time that fool fellow of yours comes around I'm going to sit on him."
"Won't do a bit of good Dad. I tried it last night and he simply likes it."

NOW SHE HAS WRITTEN A NOVEL
"Now that she has written a novel she expects to jump into fame at once, I suppose?"
"I think she does—it's leap year, you know."

HE: ARE YOU GOOD AT HISTORY?
She: Indeed I am! I never forget a date.

CHAPTER 3 THE FEMININE URGE

At the railway-station the next morning, while Shirley waited with Louis for their north-bound train she caught sight of young Sheldon. He was superintending the transfer of stable supplies from a freight-car on a siding to one of the Sheldon trucks.

He waved a careless hand to Shirley and, after a while, sauntered over to where she was standing. The sunlight glistened on his black hair, his black eyes were rather impudent under their straight brows.

"Hello," he greeted her. "Going away so soon?"

Shirley nodded. Color that was not all born of the morning breeze sharp and crisp after yesterday's rain, came in her cheeks. In her jaunty little tweed coat, with a tweed traveling-cap drawn well protruded to be.

Young Sheldon felt a tolerance that was not far from contempt for the "effeminate little duffer," as he had described the Rand heir to his aunt. "He looks like the sort who'd turn out to wear a monocle and mauve spats and a gardenia in his buttonhole," he'd told her, and Miss Liz had answered: "What else could you expect, with Louis Van Dorn for an example?"

Louis Van Dorn, who had been surveying the placid rural landscape with a bored eye, swung round and scrutinized the Sheldon boy with interest.

"You're the nephew of our famous Miss Liz, aren't you?"

The young man grinned, showing his very white teeth.

"Yes, sir, I'm proud to say that I am."

"You have a right to be," said Louis, with a warmth that belied the look in his eyes. He held out a beautifully gloved hand, and the boy extended a lean, hard, tanned one.

"You don't remember me, of course. I was a bit before your time."

"I think you were a friend of my father's, sir."

"Hardly a friend," laughed Louis. "An acquaintance, rather. I have, unfortunately, never been very popular with the Sheldon family—So you're Bob's son? Going to follow in his footsteps?"

The boy nodded: "And in Aunt Liz's too, I hope. My heart's in horses. I'm assistant manager for my aunt now. Next year, when I'm out of the university, I'll take up my end in earnest."

"Same university your Dad attended, I suppose," remarked Louis, with the faint irony he invariably bestowed upon any upholding of family tradition.

"The same, sir," Rodney mentioned the name with pride. "I go back next month—I'll be a senior."

Shirley's eyes, hidden by her cap, were wistful.

"Don't you hate to leave—all this?" Her gesture included the sweep of gracious countryside.

"You bet I do! But next year I'll have it for keeps."

"From an intellectual Olympus to a rustic paradise!" murmured Louis.

"It's the home of my ancestors, sir," said the boy quietly.

The train came thundering in; just then.

"Good-by!" Young Sheldon shook hands again with Louis and with Shirley. "Hope we'll see you around here again, sir." To Shirley, he added, with good-humored rally: "Remember what I said about toughening up before you try to ride a real horse."

From the vestibule of the Pullman, Shirley watched him swing across the tracks to where the shining chestnut was tethered. The horse whinnied a welcome at his approach and a brown setter at his side-leaped ecstatically to meet him.

The train pulled out, just as he swung into the saddle and headed the horse toward home, without a backward glance in the direction of the station.

Shirley, her eyes full of tears, went slowly into the car. Home! He was going home. And herself—the open road, the vagabond, gypsy road!

Louis was already comfortably installed in a drawing-room. He liked his comfort when he traveled and he knew how to travel after the English manner. Rugs, cushions and magazines had been provided for the long trip to New York. Shirley sat down on the green cushioned seat beside him and stared out at the fields, bright in the morning sunlight. Her heart was heavy.

Louis said suddenly, looking up from his magazine: "What do you want to do first, Shirley, when you get back to New York?"

She answered him with startling promptness. She must, he reflected, have had it all worked out in her mind for several days. Confound the Sheldon club!

For she said: "First, I want to buy girl's clothes—heaps of them. And then I want to go college."

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's retirement from the active mission on behalf of spiritualism, on which he has been engaged for the past 12 years, was recently predicted by an English psychic magazine.

25th Anniversary

On the evening of Nov. 4th, a large number of neighbours and friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Ferguson of Hampton, for the purpose of celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of this esteemed couple's marriage. Although they were somewhat taken by surprise, this amiable couple rose to the occasion, and extended a hearty welcome to each and every guest present.

After spending a very pleasant time together the Host and Hostess were presented with a well filled purse and the following address:— To Mr. and Mrs. Peter Ferguson on the occasion of their twenty-f
