CHARLOTTETOWN NO. 80 BARLEY

(Experimental Farms Note.)

Charlottetown No. 80 barley was produced by Superintendent J. A. Clarke, at the Experimental Station, Charlottetown, P. E. I., and registered under that name on April 6th, 1916, by the Canadian Seed Growers' Association's certificate No. E8596. It is a two-row barley of the Chevalier type. The straw is of medium strength and grows from three to three and a half feet high on ordinary soils. The heads average three and one-half inches in length. They are slightly curved by the weight of the grain and shed their awns at harvest time, leaving the spikes bald. The grain is firmly attached to a fairly compact head in regular order, so that it does not shell easily.

The history of the progenitors of this barley is slightly obscure. When the Woolners, of Rustico, came to the Island in the early days, they brought with them from England a two-row barley which proved to be well suited to the country. There is fairly good evidence that this barley was English Chevalier. In the process of time, after the barley was acclimatized and naturalized, it was called "Old Island Two-row." A careful examination of this barley revealed several distinct types, which were separated out and grown at the Charlottetown Station. One of these strains, "Charlottetown No. 80," has been an outstanding producer for the five years 1912-1916.

During this period, the Charlottetown No. 80 has grown in comparison with three other varieties, Gold (two-row), O. A. C. No. 21, (six-row) and Manchurian (six-row). Taking the above in the order named, the following features have been noted: Days ripening, 97, 95, 92 and 93 respectively; average yield, 76 bush, 51 lb.; 67 bush, 44 lb.; 60 bush, 46 lb.; and 66 bush, 11 lb. The average weights per bushel were 53.9, 54.4, 47.9 and 48.7 pounds respectively.

The above shows three very desirable characteristics of "Charlottetown No. 80 Barley," namely, (1) it ripens slowly and is a most satisfactory barley to sow with wheat, oats, peas or vetches for mixed grain, because it ripens more nearly at the time of the other grain. (2) it weighs much heavier per measured bush than any of the six-rowed varieties, and therefore contains a higher percentage of meal, and (3) it is a very heavy producer, yielding 12 per cent more than "Gold," and 25 per cent more than "O. A. C. No. 21," the highest yielding six-rowed in the Province.

The average yield of barley in Prince Edward Island, for the five years 1912-1916 as given in the "Census and Statistics Monthly" was twenty-nine decimal ninety-three bushels per acre. The average yield of "Charlottetown No. 80," from a number of field tests in different parts of the province was 51.92 bushels per acre showing an increase of 73 per cent over the average crop.

It is unfortunate that six-row barley was so generally recommended for Prince Edward Island for many years, not only because of its comparatively low yielding qualities here, but because of its tenacious awns, which have caused many to go out of growing barley altogether, as shown by the "Census and Statistics Monthly" reports. The 5920 acres of barley grown in 1908 have been reduced to 3600 acres in 1916. During the present food crisis, when it is essential to the Empire that food for both man and stock be produced in maximum quantities, more barley should be grown, because it will produce, under average conditions, a much greater weight of grain per acre than any other grain. Huskless and beardless barleys have been tested and discarded because of loss by shelling and their low yielding qualities. The outstanding feature of "Charlottetown No. 80 Barley" that will commend it to farmers is its habit of dropping its awns in the fields.
