Cold Settles on the Kidneys

Exposure to cold and damp atmosphere and sudden changes in the weather close the pores of the skin and this throws the waste matter which should escape through the skin back on the kidneys. The effect upon these overburdened organs is what is known as "cold on the kidneys," which usually develops into regular kidney disease or Bright's disease.

The earliest symptoms of ailing kidneys are backache, painful and scalding sensations when passing water and deposits in the urine. Immediately on the appearance of any of these indications resort should be made to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which will in a surprisingly short time set the kidneys and bowels in order and insure the return of health.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills can be absolutely relied upon as a cure for every form of kidney and liver derangement. One pill a dose ; 25 cents a box.

THE EDITOR'S MAIL.

Canadian Poets and Poetry.

SIR,—As one of those who heard Mr. Cyrus McMillan's excellent lecture on Canadian poets and poetry on Thursday evening last at the Prince of Wales College, and who listened to the discussion that followed it, you will allow me to say a few words upon the same subject, especially as THE GUARDIAN of Saturday morning also devotes an article to elucidating some of the views expressed that evening. I may as well state my views at once by saying that there have been no great Canadian poets, that there are none now and there never will be as long as the present social influences exist. The essential element of fine poetry is the description of great deeds, which consist of actions in which great obstacles are overcome with small means; of contests, successful or otherwise, carried on against overwhelming odds, of devotion to a cause without personal advantage, of devotion and loyalty to a chief, of devotion and loyalty of a chief to his followers, and of sacrifices for all kinds of ideals. Now the people of Canada have for generations been struggling for material advantages. They have been making sacrifices, not for others, but for themselves, always with a view to greater comfort in the future or to achieve a higher social position. If we look into the social movements that are taking place around us we find these to be the universal motive forces. At our colleges and universities are hundreds of students whose one aim is material advancement. True, the parents in most cases have made great sacrifices to enable the children to take a step forward either materially or socially. But this is poetical action on the part of the parents, none on the part of the children. That the parents should make the sacrifices for the children is according to natural law and works for the material benefit of the race, is clearly shown and well explained by Herbert Spencer. But there is no poetical action on the part of the children in accepting these sacrifices. They may do their duty by taking advantage of the opportunites given to them by their parents, but there is no poetical action in so doing; the essential element of poetry is lacking Since the ideals of the people consist entirely of the possession of wealth and of high social position, there can be no cultivation of the poetical feeling in the social atmosphere, and when this is wanting there can be no great poets, as they only grow in poetical ground. We have some material in the history of our country with which to construct great poems, such for instance, as the sacrifice of the young seigneur. Dollard de l'Orme, and sixteen companions to save Montreal from being overwhelmed by the Indians. They held the Indians in check for a fortnight, and in so doing died to a man. The losses of the Indians however were so great that they gave up their expedition. As also the story of Mlle. de Vercheres, the young daughter of another French Seigneur, who with only half a dozen servants defended her father's fortified house from an attack by the Indians during his absence, and held them at bay till his return. There are other instances which I cannot mention now. Such incidents as these can form the ground-work of fine poetry. But all this material for possible great poems cannot be effectively used without the inspiring influence of a poetical atmosphere, and this does not exist in Canada. The same may be said of the United States of the present day and for the same reasons. There is a similar disability in the sister art of painting. The painters in the United States find a more congenial atmosphere in the old countries of Europe than in their own country. Their best men, as soon as they have attained a certain celebrity move over to Europe. The great artists, Sargent, Abbey and Whistler, who are now considered of the highest rank in England, are Americans, who found the social conditions for the production of great works more favorable in England than in America. Their subjects, when not consisting of portraits, are representations of old social conditions or old historic incidents which can only be understood from the conditions of social life which still exist in the old country, but which have entirely disappeared in the new. I hope I have made my meaning clear, and that my contention that the present conditions of society are unfavorable to the production of great poetical work in Canada has been fairly established.
