TODAY IN DOMINION HISTORY

From Yesterday's Evening Guardian

The first Methodist sermon preached in Nova Scotia was delivered by William Black, a missionary afterward famous as "Bishop" of Nova Scotia, in a private house at Halifax 131 years ago today. At that time Halifax had Anglican, Dutch, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, Swedenborgian, Quaker, and Sandemanian congregations, and wrote Black, "a great swarm of infidels." The Methodist horrier was given a cool reception, but only a handful of people listened to his first sermon. Those who came to scoff remained to pray, and within a short time the evangelist gained scores of converts. Soon afterward a store was converted into a temporary church, and was used until a permanent structure was erected. A local magnate then built a church for the Methodists, but retained the title, and turned them out of it when he was disciplined for some laxity of conduct. The first church in Halifax owned by a Methodist congregation was Zoar Chapel, built in 1792. This was practically the beginning of Methodism in what is now the Dominion. Since then the denomination has grown until it now has nearly 350,000 members and probably a million adherents—more than any other church in Canada—and about 3,700 churches and as many ministers.

David W. Brunton, distinguished mining engineer, was born at Ayr, Ont., sixty-four years ago today.

Baron Stanley of Preston, afterward the sixteenth Earl of Derby, assumed office as Governor-General of Canada twenty-five years ago today. He remained in Ottawa until 1893, in which year he succeeded his brother as earl.
