LORD KITCHENER'S ARMY

The prompt response which has been given to Lord Kitchener's appeal for volunteers has enabled him says the War Press Bureau, to decide on and define the framework to be employed, and to make all necessary arrangements for the infantry training.

Six divisions have been formed, in the designation and employment of which territorial interests have been remembered. The divisions will be known as the Scottish, the Irish, the Northern, the Western, the Eastern, and the Light Infantry. The divisions will consist of three brigades, the names of whose Battalions are well known in the history of the Army. Composing, for instance, the First Brigade of the Scottish Division, will be the Black Watch, the Seaforth Highlanders, the Gordon Highlanders, and the Cameron Highlanders. Shorncliffe is a convenient centre for the Eastern Division, and the facilities which it affords are held to offset any increase in the distance from Norfolk and Suffolk homes. The Western Division will asemble on Salisbury Plain, the convenience of which for the purposes of training are well known. The Curragh is the natural home of the Irish Division, which will consist throughout its ranks of Irishmen. The station of the Northern Division has not yet been decided upon. A suitable training ground will shortly be selected.

The name, Light Division, may recall the time of Wellington's advance in the Peninsula, when Cratford's Light Brigade of 1809 developed into the Light Division of 1810. The defence made by the Light Division of that day for five months on a long front against an enemy six times its own strength is well known in military history. The King's Royal Rifles and the Rifle Brigade compose the first brigade of the new Light Infantry.

The Scottish Division which will be stationed at Aldershot, will consist of:—

The Black Watch (Royal Highlanders).
Seaforth Highlanders (Ross-shire Bucs, the Duke of Albany"s.
The Gordon Highlanders.
The -;Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders.
The Royal Scots Lothian Regiment.
The Royal Scots Fusiliers.
Princess Louise's Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders.
The King's Own Scottish Borderers.
The Cameronians.
The Scotish Rifles.
The Highland Light Infantry.

A TREACHEROUS TOAST.

In the Royal Palace at Bruxelles on October 25th, 1910, the German Emperor proposed the following toast to the King and Queen of Belgium:

"May the relations between Belgium and Germany, based upon confidence and good neighborliness, become closer still. May the reign of your Majesty shed happiness and prosperity in its Royal House and amongst its people! This is the wish which comes from the deepest recesses of my heart. Long live Belgium! Long live the Royal Family!"

It is quite likely that at the very time when the Kaiser proposed this toast it was the settled policy of the German War Lords to overrun Belgium, without the slightest hesitation,

UHLAN ATTACK WAS REPULSED BY BRITISH: BRITISH NEED MORE MEN.

LONDON, September 5.—Sir Philip Chetwood, commanding the British cavalry brigade which routed the Prussian horse at Cambrae, Landreals and Decatau on August 28, writes home, "we have been fighting with odds five to one against us. We have been through the Uhlans like brown paper butone must have men.

if this course promised military advantage. In any case, less than four years after this treacherous toast to the newly enthroned King and Queen of Belgium, the Kaiser's troops had overrun, without any provocation whatsoever, the heart of Belgium territory, had created thousands of Belgian widows and thousands of fatherless Belgian children, had dropped shells in the night on the far-famed Belgian city of Antwerp, and had ruthlessly destroyed the Belgian town of Louvain, the home of priceless treasures of literature and art.

If the whole civilized world is today appalled at the monstrous brood which militarism has produced in the person of the German War Lords, it is truly not without sufficient cause.
