Souris Native Visits Old Home

Mr. J. A. Maskell, Boston, is visiting the city,a guest at the Charlottetown Hotel, leaving later for Souris, his old home town, where he will be a guest at the Cox Hotel. It is fifty-five years since Mr. Maskell left here for the States, where he has made good, and holds a prominent place in public life. Recently, before the war, Mr. Maskell toured Europe, visiting the principal countries over a lengthened period. It is some time since he visited his old home, and he is glad to be once more down among his ain folk. Although a Republican, Mr. Maskell has supported Mr. Roosevelt for the past eight years, and voted for Senator Walsh.

He strongly disapproves of the Senator's anti-Roosevelt policy at the present time, and has written and told him so. Mr. Maskell is firmly convinced Mr. Roosevelt will be re-elected President, as 75 per cent of the people approve of him and his pro-British policy.

Closely identified with the Red Cross and Y.M.C.A. in Boston, Mr. Maskell has worked ardently, and successfully, on their behalf, and has been placed on the honor roll of the latter for meritorious financial assistance.

On the occasion of the recent visits of the Maritime Premiers to the Canadian Club and British American Legion (organized by Mr. Richard Johnston, brother of Mr. J. J. Johnston, K.C., one of the most popular and highly thought of Canadians in Boston) he had a pleasant interview with Premier Campbell. Recently Chief Justice Lommus, of the Supreme Judicial Court, appointed Mr. Johnston a Master of the Supreme Court—an honor greatly coveted by members of the bar. Mr. Maskell intends to remain here for three weeks to enjoy a holiday among old and familiar surroundings.

To Investigate Charges Against British Agent

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27 —(AP) — A justice department official said today that an investigation would be made of charges voiced in the senate that Sir George Paish, 72-year-old British economist, came here to try to get the United States into the war.

If the investigation reveals that Sir George was here for such a purpose and failed to disclose it in his application for a visitor's permit, this official said, that could be made the grounds for revoking his permit.

Senator Burton Wheeler, Montana Democrat, said in the Senate yesterday—and Sir George subsequently denied the charge —that the Briton had told him in a conversation:—

"I am responsible for getting this country into the last war and I intend to get it into this one."

Miners Ask Standardization Of Wages

TRURO, N. S., Aug. 27 —(CP)— Demands for standardization of coal miners' wages in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were voiced today by delegates to the 18th convention of district 26 of the United Mine Workers of America.

Speakers, declaring there was wide variance between rates paid in different areas, urged wages be levelled off at the highest scales paid in the district.

An attack by several delegates on the Nova Scotia workmen's compensation board developed in another debate. Appointment of a committee to draft a plan of action in dealing with the board was the answer to demands for a "firm hand" by the U.M.W.

Jury Holds Cote Criminally Responsible

MAGOG, Que., Aug. 27.—(CP) — A coroner's jury declared tonight that Arthur Cote, 26-year-old resident of Montreal, was criminally responsible for the death of Jeffrey Munn, of Hamilton, Ont., whose partially burned body was found near this eastern townships municipality August 11.

Following the inquest, Cote was held by Provincial Police on a coroner's warrant, based on the recommendation of the jury "that Arthur Cote be held for trial on a charge of murder." He will be taken to Sherbrooke, Que., tonight for arraignment tomorrow.

The jury reached its verdict after hearing Alice LaJeunesse, Cote's sweetheart, testify that Cote had told her he had seen Munn carrying a considerable sum of money, and had asked her if she wished him to "knock" Munn, to get the money.

Cote and Miss LaJeunesse, together with two other Montrealers, Aliett Girard and Yvette Simard, had been held by Provincial Police for the last three days as material witnesses in the case.

Guest Children To Be Distributed On Quota Basis

OTTAWA, Aug. 27—(CP)—Distribution of 1,285 guest children by far the largest party yet to arrive under the British Government scheme, is being made now on a quota basis throughout Canada, Dr. R. C. Wallace, chairman of the National Advisory Committee for overseas children and principal of Queen's University, Kingston, said in an interview today.

Each province is receiving numbers of children based upon the provincial population and number of invitations making homes available. The total previously distributed has not been announced.

Asked the exact function of the committee, Dr. Wallace referred to it as giving "personality" to Canada in respect to the children and their problems. As human and material problems arise, the federal or provincial authorities may consult the advisory committee, the Canadian counterpart of a similar organization in England.

The executive meeting in an all-day session yesterday discussed general problems which have developed in connection with the scheme and will convene again September 4.

One of the problems is the raising of funds for extra assistance to children if hospitalization or medical attention became necessary and in cases of transfer or transportation which are now a charge on the Federal Government.

Wartime Wye Too Peaceful For Rivermen

SYMOND'S YAT, Eng.—(CP) — Rivermen of this sleepy beauty spot in the Wye River Valley find war has sliced summer tourist business to a fraction of what it was in peace time.

Normally they are busy all through August, taking boisterous, rollicking boatloads of sightseers on trips down the Wye gorge to Monmouth, six miles away. Their rowboats negotiate five rapids en route down the winding stream, the largest just below Symond's Yat. Passengers have to return afoot while the river men row and pole their craft back upstream.

But this year the flow of visitors has dwindled to a trickle. Most rivermen have laid up their boats, and devote their time to cultivating their terraced gardens on the steep hillsides which hem in the river here.

A few still operate, however. One, Jim Gardiner, who likes to talk while he works, entertained a party of four on the trip down river with tales of his experiences on the Wye. He made the journey to Monmouth into a running commentary on the scenery, historic spots along the way, mingled with anecdotes and reminiscences of former years.

Russians Paid

Further downstream was a large country house, now empty, standing in a big estate. Jim related how he had once taken a Russian Communist couple down the river. Seeing the house, they denounced a political system which allowed one man to own so much wealth, and called the riverman a capitalist when he defended the system. The argument became quite heated.

"Me—a capitalist," Jim laughed. "But I paid them out," he chuckled. "I charged them 30 bob instead of a pound for the trip."

There's good salmon fishing in a slow-running, deep stretch of the Wye. Lease of the fishing rights runs into hundreds of guineas annually. Riverman Gardiner, however, recalled he once caught a salmon that cost him not a penny. The salmon, one of the thousands that come up from the sea and leap the rapids below this deep stretch, jumped into his boat. He kept it.

You've got to be a good "touter" —talker—to get business as a boatman, Jim contends. When tourists hesitate, his technique is simple. "Keep talking to them— don't let them get a word in edgewise. If you let them start you're done."

One of nine brothers who've spent most of their lives in the Wye Valley he finds plenty to do whether or not there are passengers around. "Last night," he told his listeners, "I worked in the garden until 10 o'clock, and I was up again working in it at 5 o'clock this morning."

But rivermen aren't what they used to be, he declares. A brother of his, "strong as an ox, he were," used to row boatloads upstream as well as down. He collapsed and died in his boat at the age of 62, just after poling one party up through the biggest rapids in sight of Symond's Yat.

Returns From Lengthy Visit To Old Country

Miss Ola M. MacLean, of Vancouver, daughter of the late Capt. C. Gower MacLean, spent last week in Charlottetown, the guest of her grandfather, Mr. A. A. MacLean, K. C.

Miss MacLean spent a year in England and Wales and arrived last week in Canada with 2,000 other Canadians (chiefly children) in one of the ships convoyed by naval vessels. She lived in Wales during the greater part of her stay in Britain. The city in which she lived was bombed repeatedly during the summer, but very little damage was done, and only one fatal casualty resulted.

During her stay abroad she visited Italy, Switzerland and France a few days before war was declared. She visited Scotland on several occasions.

Miss MacLean says the people of Great Britain are determined to carry on the war till Hitler is defeated and the continent of Europe cleared of the Huns.

AWAKENED WOMAN

"What about Ainsworth?" He turned to the other man. "Did you and Frills fix this all up between you?"

Before Robert could answer, Joyce broke in. "Oh, no, no, Neil, please—I wasn't quite so beastly as all that. Nothing had been fixed up —we had simply, well, fallen in love and there the matter stood." She looked at Robert and was hurt to find an amused smile lingering about his eyes.

Joyce felt a profound shame creep over her. Neil had just told her she was free, and yet Robert sat quietly, saying nothing tensely digging holes in the soft ground with his riding crop. Her husband was, in a sense, offering her to her lover—who was making no move to claim her. Was she being rejected by both men? Her nerves, strung tautly under the strain of the entire morning, collapsed utterly, and she felt that she would grow hysterical if she sat there another moment.

She sprang to her feet. "Well, now I've unmasked before both of you!" she cried, her voice trembling close to tears, "Goodbye!"

Neil was after her in a moment. "Here, dear, I'll go back with you —"

"No, no, please don't. Please leave me alone. For Heaven's sake, Neil, Let me be for just a little while—" He fell back, struck by the vehemence of her tone, and she sprang lightly in the saddle and galloped off.

Once in her room, Joyce locked the door and flung herself down on a couch. She felt crushed and hurt as she had at no time since she had found herself Frills Packard. Her disillusionment about Robert Ainsworth was so profound that she felt she had lost all faith in humanity. Every one seemed less noble, all life took on a menacing ruthless form. Where could she go to find beauty, to find truth, to find fineness if not in this man whom she had so ardently worshiped?

That he should have regarded the situation at first as one to be treated with cynical levity was a fault that seemed to her graver than the grave.

She did not . . . want . . . Robert Ainsworth.

• • • •

When she awoke it was a cool evening, and she was shivering. As she collected her thoughts she noticed an envelope lying on the floor under her door. It contained a note from Neil, and she read

Dear Joyce:—

"When I got back I found a message to go and see Mother. She's not seriously ill, but feeling badly and wanted to see me. I shan't tell her anything about us, of course. We must talk everything over. I thought it might be better if I'd camp out somewhere else tonight. Please go to bed and get a good rest. I'll see you tomorrow. "Neil."

Joyce read this over several times, almost uncomprehending. At last, however, she knew what she must do. She knew she must go away—that it was the only thing for her to do.

"I've been wrong to stick it out this long," she thought, "No wonder I've gotten things into such a mess!"

It did her good to have some definite work to do. In less than an hour she had bathed, dressed and packed two bags with Frills' simplest clothes and belongings.

"It seems like stealing to be taking them," she thought worriedly, "yet what can I do? Neil doesn't want Frills' clothes—they won't do him any good if I leave them. I'll have to find some sort of work right away, and I can't apply for it unless I'm decently dressed. Of course I won't take any of Frills' jewelry or anything of real value."

Roxie met her at the foot of the stairs. "Excuse me, ma'am, but Mr. Neil he said you'd be waking up after a time and we should have your dinner ready."

"Very well, Roxie, just serve it quickly in the dining-room, please. And tell Sam I want to speak to him."

Once Joyce had decided to leave, she felt she could not go quickly enough. She could not endure looking about Neil Packard's house and reflecting that she would probably never see it again. Her only salvation was inacting at once. She was grateful for the nonchalance with which Sam received her orders, and for the lack of demonstration on the part of Roxie.
