SMILES

GABBIE GERTIE

"A man of parts is an actor who gets his hair dyed."

"I hear your cousin, the singer, has made great strides in his profession." "Yep, great. He used to sing when he received an encore; now he only smiles."

"And you really believe that Helen's marriage was an affair of the heart?" "Of course I do. She was led to believe that the rich old duffer she married had a weak heart."

A DIALOGUE

Him—Will you love me, dearest one, when I am gone? Her—That depends on just how far gone you are.

Mother: Do you think that young man has saved anything? Daughter: Oh, he must have, mamma; he says he never courted a girl before.

"After the passage of the law in spite of the efforts to enforce it, Murray contrived to build up a clandestine means of shipping goods to Canada, and while the French are more pressed for cheap trade goods than they were, nevertheless they are better off than they should be and our traders are put up at a disadvantage. Now the time for which the law was passed is expired, and the provincial government hath enacted it again. It comes up this afternoon before the lords commissioners for trade and plantations, when Murray will petition for its rejection."

"But surely he will lose." Juggins shook his head. "I fear not. The best we can hope for is a compromise." "Yet you say he is in alliance with the French and the Jacobites!" "I say that, Master Harry, but I cannot prove it. Remember, even you, who have recently come from St. Germain, had never heard of him. Moreover, he is hand in glove with the Pelhams and all the corrupt officials in Whitehall. He hath buttered many a grasping hand, and if he can secure his operations a few years longer he will have laid the groundwork for England's overthrow in the New world."

"I leave to your imagination the effect upon our people at home of a disastrous war with France at this juncture. King George is scarce settled on his throne, and so good an excuse would pave the way for the Stuarts' return." "Yes, that is true," I assented. "This is a dangerous plot." Juggins looked at me keenly. "You are still desirous to join in thwarting it?" "More than ever. But I see not how I can be of service to you."

"If the lords of trade have received the orders I expect, then you can be of great service to me and to your country. Come, you shall have your first lesson. You may attend me to the hearing before the lords of trade. I wish you to observe what passes at the hearing, and to study Murray. For if he wins his stay, as I fear he will, then it is my purpose to send you to New York for such evidence as will wreck his conspiracy." "And I will go gladly," I said, a thrill of exultation in my heart at the bare thought of a man's part to play. He collected some documents and maps, placed them in a green string-bag and gave it to me to carry. "And remember," he cautioned me to the door, "do you keep at least two paces behind me. Speak only when I speak to you, and hold your head low and your shoulders stooped. Slouch, if you can. If any address you look stupidly at them and mumble an answer. I will explain that you are slow-witted."

designed to notice the humble 'prentice lad who followed him. I avoided all scrutiny and reached Whitehall with considerable more self-confidence than I had started with. The lords of trade sat in a lofty chamber of a dirty gray stone building over against the river. At one end was a dais with a long, closed-in desk across it. Behind this nodded my lords in perwigged majesty, five of them, two fat and pompous, one small and birdlike, one tall and cadaverous and one who looked like nothing at all.

"That is Tom Pelham," whispered Master Juggins, pointing at the last as we took our seats. But I had already transferred my gaze to an extraordinary creature who stood by a window on the opposite side of the room. It was a black man, squat and enormously broad, whose long powerful arms reached almost to the floor.

As I watched him, fascinated, his eyes found my face and he surveyed me, apparently without any human interest whatsoever, but as a wild beast might consider a fat stag when too full to care about a kill. He was dressed in a bright-red livery coat with gold lace, and the cocked hat which he held was covered with silver embroidery.

I felt Juggins tugging at my arm. "Do you see him?" he whispered. "I never saw anything so hideous in my life," I answered. Juggins laughed, as his eyes followed mine.

"No, I mean not the negro. 'Twas Murray I spoke of. He sits several seats farther on. I looked as directed and picked out a man who lounged back comfortably in a chair, talking with a group of merchants who seemed to hang on his words. He was elegantly clad, yet very quietly, rather in the fashion of a fine gentleman than a rich trader.

Though sitting, he showed himself to a large man of massive frame. He wore an immense perwig in the prevailing mode, and there was about him an air of pride and self-confidence. Though he must have been middleaged, he carried himself like a young man or a soldier.

"He is no enemy to be sighted," I said. "No," he thrives on opposition; but—

A secretary rapped for order. "To the king's most excellent majesty in council," he recited from a document he held, "the humble petition and representation of Samuel Baker, Samuel Storke, Richard Janeway and others, merchants of London, trading to New York, in behalf of themselves and the rest of the persons concerned in the New York trade; which petition, having been considered by his majesty's council, hath been referred, with his gracious consent, to the lords his commissioners for trade and plantations."

"You will note," whispered Master Juggins, "that the name of Murray is not included in the list. He appears here, not as the principal, which he is, but at the request of

TIRED EYES

May Spoil Your Evening—

Not Less Light But More's the Remedy!

EVENING is the time to relax and enjoy yourself.

Some homes are centres of pleasant activity evening after evening. In others, everyone seems let down and listless.

TIRED EYES may be the reason. Eye-strain fatigues the whole being. Dim lights may seem restful because they make you feel like resting. Brightly lighted rooms make you want to be up and doing. They make reading a joy, writing or conversation pleasant—cards an enjoyable pastime.

It is no mere chance that thousands flock to the gay white way. The lights attract and make them feel keenly alive. You can create the same atmosphere at home.

TIRED EYES and improper lighting go hand in hand. It's much easier to have too few lamps than too many. Look around and make sure you have light in every corner where you need it. You need it in every corner.

Our Lighting Bureaus will help you work out the best results these merchants, who are decoys, and ostensibly in their interest.

"You have heard the petition and reference of the council read," gabbled Pelham in whining voice. "We will now hear arguments by the opposing sides. Who appears against the petition?"

Master Juggins rose beside me. His arguments were substantially those he had used with me, but worked additionally by a mass of facts and statistics. When he sat down it seemed to me that no Englishman who thought of his own country's interest could resist the logic of his appeal.

There was a smattering of applause, and then a merchant introduced Murray, with the remark that he had kindly consented to give his opinion as he had recently come on a visit to London from the province of New York, where he was in residence.

BLAMES INFLUENZA AND PNEUMONIA FOR INCREASING U. S. DRUG ADDICTS

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—Recent epidemic waves of influenza and pneumonia are blamed directly on an increasing number of dope addicts among the youth of the United States, according to the Spanish-American war hero Captain Richmond P. Hobson yesterday in a country-wide radio address.

Captain Hobson, who is secretary-general of the World Conference on Narcotic Education, asserted that addicts of both sexes, with lowered vitality and resistance to disease, forgetful of personal hygiene and personal morals, become incubators and carriers of vice diseases, the diseases of the streptococcus, the pneumococcus, influenza, and so forth.

Citing the situation among youthful narcotic addicts in Detroit, the captain pointed out that during the Christmas shopping period in that city, shop lifting and petty thievery became excessive. By coralling all the known dope users, the thievery stopped at once.

In discussing the world war upon the international dope ring, Hobson declared that an investigation of a health commissioner of a large metropolis showed that a stream of youth pouring into the underworld of that city had come down the drug road.

"The largest group in the population of our Federal prisons is not the liquor group, but the narcotic group," he added.

MODERNISTIC FURNITURE OUSTED—COMFORT NOW KEYNOTE OF DESIGN

CHICAGO, Feb. 26.—Modernistic chairs in which no humans and very few cats, for that matter, could sit comfortably, are no more.

And modernistic beds, with jig-saw rails and triangular pillows to try the necks of the most limber-muscled sleepers, no longer are being made. Neither are bookcases which look like disjoined umbrella stands, nor divans which resemble pool tables in general, all-round hardness.

The whole "art-moderne" motif, it developed tonight, had added into the limbo of things gone but not missed. A bit of investigation at the American Furniture Mart, which is the second largest building in the world and which is crammed full of the last word in furniture, revealed that the furniture makers have decided it's much too tough a task to make Americans sacrifice comfort for any mere stylishness.

So back the furniture makers have gone to chairs which look like chairs and to beds which are beds in fact as well as in name. The old familiar easy chair in the living-room, the occasional armchair, the graceful dining-room pieces and the soft Devenport have returned again to all the furniture displays at the mart building.

The furniture makers are trying to be modern, but not "moderne" and as far as that pesky word "modernistic" is concerned, they wish they'd never heard of it.

FEEL MEAN?

Don't be helpless when you suddenly get a headache. Reach in your pocket for immediate relief. If you haven't any Aspirin with you, get some at the first drugstore you come to. Take a tablet or two and be rid of the pain. Take promptly. Nothing is gained by waiting to see if the pain will leave of its own accord. It may grow worse! Why postpone relief? There are many times when Aspirin tablets will "save the day." They will always ease a throbbing head. Quiet a grumbling tooth. Relieve nagging pains of neuralgia or neuritis. Or check a sudden cold. Even rheumatism has lost its terrors for those who have learned to depend on these tablets.

Gargle with Aspirin tablets at the first suspicion of sore throat, and reduce the infection. Look for Aspirin on the box—and the word Genuine in red. Genuine Aspirin tablets do not depress the heart.
